STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lansing—Gov. Alex. J. Groesbeck has proclaimed the week of April 18 to 24 as American Forest Week. In the same proclamation he designated Friday, May 7, as Arbor Day.

Ypsilanti—A victory dinner was held recently after the three-day membership campaign of the Ypsilanti Board of Commerce. Ypsilanti claims that the 798 members enrolled as members of the board give it the largest board of commerce, in proportion to its population of any city in the country. Ypsilanti's population is 11,000.

White Cloud—The Newaygo County Bank, a private institution of which B. C. Sickles is president, has closed its doors because of financial difficulties. Depositors held a meeting and voted in favor of having the Old State Bank of Fremont appointed receiver. The bank's troubles are said to have been caused by a considerable amount of delayed payments on loans.

Roseville—The recently incorporated village of Roseville, which is located between the Ten and Eleven-Mile roads in Erin township, and bounded on the east by Lake township and on the west by Warren township, plans to engage a city manager and is looking for a certified civil engineer, according to John A. Asmus, president of the village.

Grand Rapids—East Grand Rapids, which recently voted against annexation with the city to avoid paying a higher tax rate, will not receive fire protection from Grand Rapids fire department after May 1, when the present contract expires. City officials believe the compensation paid by the township for the protection is too low. East Grand Rapids will be required to pay an increased fee if the contract is renewed.

Big Rapids—The three members of the Mecosta County road commission resigned recently and their resignations were accepted at once by the board of supervisors. The supervisors had threatened to remove the commissioners unless they resigned. The commission and supervisors have been in disagreement throughout the winter on matters of policy. The supervisors expect to elect a new road commission soon.

Monroe—At a recent session of the board of supervisors the building committee was instructed to confer with the city commission and board of education with a view of exchanging properties. Both the city and country offices have outgrown their present quarters. The board refused to appropriate $500 toward the Eastern Michigan Tourists' association. Herman N. Butler, East Tawas, vice-president of the association, addressed the board.

Monroe—The Monroe school board has officially accepted a gift of $1,000 from G. A. Christiancy, of Hartsdale, N. Y., interest from the investment of which will be devoted to prizes for essays by public school students, on the constitution of the United States. Several years ago the board named a school in honor of the donor's father, the late Isaac P. Christiancy, former supreme court judge, United States senator from Michigan and minister to Peru.

Calumet—A mile and a quarter underground, the deepest telephone in the world, has been installed at Tamarack Shaft No. 5 of the Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Mining Co., property here. The line connecting the telephone far down in the shaft, with the C. & H. Exchange, is a huge perpendicular cable, weighing one and one-half pounds to the foot. The equipment was placed in commission by the company's electrical department, assisted by the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. office here.

Grand Rapids—The Michigan route of the James Whitcomb Riley Memorial Highway is to be from the Indiana line via M-13 to Fife Lake Corners, then by the new and undetermined United States route, M-31, connecting M-12 and M-11 and by M-11 to the Straits of Mackinac. It was determined by representatives of towns on M-13 and M-11 and of motor organizations of Grand Rapids and the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce in conference with officials of the Riley Highway Association.

Lansing—At the request of Thomas E. Johnson, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck has fixed Tuesday, April 27, as the date for a meeting of the State Board of Education with the State Administrative Board at Lansing. Mr. Johnson informed the Governor that the Board of Education desired to discuss the rebuilding of the administration building at the Central Normal school at Mt. Pleasant, the building of a fifth normal school and other educational problems.

Monroe—According to a resolution adopted recently the board of supervisors will hereafter meet the second Tuesday in April, the third Monday the following week; the third Monday in June, with a recess until Tuesday in July, August and September; the second Mondays in October and December; the third Mondays in January and February, and the second Monday in March. The board may also meet on special dates, upon notice decided by the chairman or five members. The board may meet during the year not more than 25 times.

Lansing—Construction of the proposed new city jail is expected to receive a decided impetus by the action of the state health and the welfare departments in recommending to Governor Alex. J. Groesbeck the pardoning of the 51 prisoners who were serving five-day sentences for violation of a state law in attending a nude party in a local hall. Previous to July 17, 1925, representatives of the State Welfare commission inspected the jail and, in a letter to Mayor Alfred Doughty, recommended that steps be taken to alleviate conditions.

Prohibition Tidings

The Prohibition Amendment became a part of the fundamental law of the country through a vote of the majority of the people, which is the important reason why it must be enforced.

All of the real whiskey in the United States is now stored in five concentration warehouses.

Before the war Uncle Sam collected $284,008,512.62 from liquors of a total of $512,723,287.77. Note that the tax on liquors at that period yielded more than 50 percent of all internal revenue collections. Last year the total taxes collected from liquors was $27,585,708.37 of a total of $2,796,179,257.06 or 9.8 percent.

"Today in all of the warehouses there is only whiskey enough stored to last this country, at its former rate of consumption, less than six months."—Mabel G. Reinecke, Collector of Internal Revenue.

"Canada is coming through—a cause for hope is that on June last three great Protestant bodies—the Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists in Canada federated, and went into action with Prohibition pinned to their masthead."—Mrs. Gordon Wright, President of W. C. T. U., Canada.

"It is thrilling to speak to student bodies numbering from twenty five to 4,000 and know that in some instances they will respond 100 percent to the pledge of total abstinence."—Maude B. Perkins.

"Our boys and girls are recruiting as National Prohibition Guards not only to safeguard their own beloved land, but they are likewise pledging their prayers, their zeal, their helping hand for the boys and girls of every land."—Mary B. Ervin.

The following resolution presented by Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, was adopted by the National W. C. T. U. Convention in the presence of General Lincoln C. Andrews, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Chief of the Federal Law Enforcement Officers—a copy was sent to President Coolidge: "Resolved, That the National W. C. T. U. expresses its deep interest in the reorganization plan of the United States Government for prohibition law enforcement and pledges to the President of the United States and to General Andrews our continued co-operation in all efforts to secure the observance and enforcement of the prohibition law. We declare that we will judge the plan by results."

The world is marking time on this question to see whether America will demonstrate that the prohibition law can be enforced."—Miss McCorkindale, Australia.

"An administrative officer is no more entitled to choose what statutes he will or will not enforce than is a citizen to choose what laws he will or will not obey. As well might he ask to strike from the Ten Commandments those he was not inclined to keep.

"Obedience to the law is the first duty of every citizen, whether he be rich or poor; enforcement of the law against every violator, rich or poor is the solemn obligation of every official."—John W. Davis.

"There is more money in the pockets of the average man since the bartender's cash register was silenced. A drinking America could not have bought 2,427,000 motor vehicles purchased in 1924."—R. H. Scott.

"I hope and pray for the further triumph of prohibition. Much has already been gained. The law is securely in the Constitution."—Frances E. Clark.—National W. C. T. U.

Letter From A Log Cabin In Lenawee County

This is the second of a series of letters written by one Miss Chandler to relatives back in Philadelphia in 1832. When the red men roamed Sault St. Marie to Monroe unmolested.

Hazelbank, 4th month 24th, 1833.
My dear Aunt:

Spring is a very busy season in the country, and this spring to us more so than any we have yet had in Michigan. There is sowing oats, fence making, ploughing, harrowing, planting corn and I know not what all. Part of it is done and part of it yet to do. Brother put in this spring, between four and five acres of oats. He is now putting up the rails that he split last winter, around about twenty acres, which he wishes to break up during the summer. He has also a big gate to make, part of his oat ground yet to enclose in the way of fence making. Corn planting time has not come yet. Gardening occupies several hours of my time almost daily, and will, I suppose, keep me pretty busy for sometime longer, even more so than at present. It is a business I am not very skillful in, but I think I shall grow fond of as I improve in it. So please do not forget me when thee has a chance of getting seeds, whether flower or vegetable, if the latter are not very common ones. I have now a basket of roots to plant sent me by one of our neighbors, and must go and attend to them, having been only waiting for the frost of which there was a little last night, to get off the ground. When I am tired enough to quit work I shall probably come in and resume my pen.—And I am here again.

Our little meeting house a long time ago received an addition of more than its original size, but it will be either further enlarged or what is more probable, a new building erected before a great while. It is, however, in contemplation to build another meeting house across the river this summer when some more of the folks who are expected, come.

The report of land selling here at fifty cents an acre is not correct. At least, we have heard nothing of it in Michigan. Emigration is rapid enough at one dollar and a quarter. But half lots (40 acres) are now sold to actual settlers, but not less than eighty acres to those who purchased for speculation.

Brother has not yet tapped his maple trees. It has not been a very favorable spring for making maple sugar and he had so much business on hand that it would have been more expensive for him to have attempted to make for himself than to buy, especially as the greater part of his trees are almost too young to tap.

The openings have not yet been on fire very near us this season, though they have been at some distance, several times. Last evening the sky in every direction, north, south, east and west was lit up with distant fires. The country does not yet look green excepting the grain fields, but grass and wild flowers are starting up and in a little while will look beautiful.

Brother gave a half dozen bushels of wheat for his chairs, six dollars for the half dozen. They are windsor, not very handsome, but answer very well for our dwelling. They are Tecumseh manufacture.

We have had for a week past another house in sight, Joseph Gibson's who purchased some land from uncle Darius. It seems rather singular to see houses spring up around us in this manner—a vacant space one day and a house the next.

Brother this morning brought home a purchase which he made the other day; a sow and eight pigs, for which he paid twelve dollars; as they are of a superior kind, the price is not considered unreasonable. Yesterday morning he brought home the cow from the woods with a fine little calf by her side. The livestock of Hazelbank, in case thee should should have any curiosity about the matter, now consists of five head cattle (calf included), fourteen pigs, big and little, some twenty chickens, and a couple of cats, one of them a mouser. We expect to get another cow before long. Some of our hens have not brought off any broods this spring, but will, I suppose before a great while.

Thee says we ought to write more frequently than thyself,—not taking into consideration how much more thee has to tell, and that some of my letters are equal to three common sized ones, and I assure thee we don't mind the trouble of reading letters here at all. We shall be quite ready to receive one as soon as it can get here. I believe I have told thee everything I can think of at present that would be likely to interest thee, and now I suppose the next thing will be to send it off, lest it should miss a conveyance to the post office. We are all well and I am very affectionately.

Thy niece,

E.

One Hundred Years of Railroading

The New York Central Lines will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the steam railroad in America April 17, 1926. The event was suitably commemorated at both the Albany and Schenectady depots which marked the first run of 17 miles. There were exercises and speaking by notables of the road and a pageant of locomotives of different periods headed by the old "DeWitt Clinton" first successful American built locomotive. Other railroads in these early days which began the use of steam locomotives were often obliged to substitute horses and mules as the early engines were very crude and only ran when they were feeling good but the old DeWitt Clinton never missed her trips, as reported by history and was good for thirty miles per hour, often negotiating the distance between Albany and Schenectady in 38 minutes including stops. The journey from Schenectady to New York City where a big banquet was held at Waldorf-Astoria Hotel was made by a train composed of the old engines and the famous "999" which made 112½ miles per hour during World's Fair time, also some of the latest Mallet freight haulers and best rolling stock of the road. First president of the line was Erastus Corning, the last one is "One hundred Car" Pat Crowley and all the way down these men have displayed the best administrative ability in the Nation. A. H. Smith was probably the most popular man who ever held that high office. The first locomotive was built in West Point foundary New York and floated down the Hudson River on a barge Cars were fashioned from former stage coaches mounted on trucks and the track was simply a length of strap iron laid on a stringer, and passengers usually sat on "pins and needles" lest this strap iron should become loose at the ends and come up through the car bottoms which it sometimes did, One can imagine the novelty of the first railroad experience with everybody Oh-ing and Ah-ing over the wonderful contraption which went by steam and spat black smoke and cinders and coughed and blowed like a giant animal, At the various stops along the way the incredulous country people would gather near the hissing steam Juggernaut and marvel at its great speed and strength and a lot of folks positively refused to ride behind such a machine.

Not long ago a pioneer of Michigan passed away who was so far as known the only living person who had ever ridden behind the DeWitt Clinton. He remembered when but a baby being taken by his parents on such a trip. His age we believe was about 90 and he must have taken the trip several years after the establishment of the line. The Clinton is still intact and could with a little repairing be made to run under its own steam.

History of Adams Township

As compiled by the History class of North Adams High school

T. N. LAMB, Principal

In 1834 there were 60,000 inhabitants in Michigan. These were mostly in and around Detroit engaged in the fur trade. In order to encourage the immigration and development of southern Michigan, the government opened up a road from Detroit to the western part of the territory. This was a very rude road, really more of an Indian trail in some parts it did follow this trail. This road was called the Chicago turnpike and on this in 1828 or about that time, Jonesville was located.

Adams township was created on March, 23, 1836 and since its organization Jefferson, Ransom and the east half of Amboy have been formed from its origin. Adams was settled principally through Moscow and it is said Adams was formed from that township by an act of Legislature March 23rd 1836 as given before. Adams was formerly heavily timbered.

The first settler in what is now Adams township was Salmon Sharp. Sharp had his cabin built already when William Cutler had settled at what is now North Adams in June of the same year. It was after him that our village here, once had the name of Cutler's Corners. Salmon Sharp had with him a large rope, by means of which he helped to raise many log buildings in the neighborhood.

On April the 4th 1836 the first Annual township meeting took place near the center of the township, two miles south and a half mile west. The balloting was done in the open air and the inspectors and clerk did their duties seated on a big log. For a number of years following the elections were held at private residences which were appointed a year in advance. There seemed to be more offices than eligible men, so each one took as many offices as he could. The second Annual meeting was held in 1837. In the many years of political life of this township there has been only one tie vote and one occasion on which the candidate was elected by a majority of one vote.

The officers elected were as follows: Salmon Sharp, supervisor; Seth Kempton, clerk; Wm Cutler and Wm Jackson, commissioners of schools; Easton Wilbur, Stephen Birdsell, Joseph Atard, commissioners of Highways; Joseph Dawley, Julius Swift, Directors of the Board; Easton Wilbur, collector.

The first mill, built in the township was built by Swift & Co., in 1837 or '38. Soon another mill was built in North Adams by John Lane Later one was built in the eastern part of town by L. H, Updike, and one in the southern part by Keeney and Howe.

The first Post Office was thirty five miles from any other, the mail was forwarded once a week. Among the first papers was the North Adams Hammer later called the Advocate. First paper was started by George Stran from Moscow.

Salmon Sharp owned the first log house; it was ten logs high with other dimensions eighteen by twenty-four feet.

The first school in the Township of Adams was composed of three families: Fowler's, Bates', and Kirby's. It was made of bass logs and was 15 by 18 feet, and built in 1835 on the Fowler farm. The first teacher was Miss Emily Furguson or Miss Phebe Wells. As soon as possible another school was built. Later in 1838 another school was built in what is now section 6. The first teacher was Mary Driscoll- There was no limit to the district; it went as far as there were any children to come.

In winter there were about 40 scholars, and in summer there were not so many, because the boys were needed more, then to help in various occupations. The school room had a box stove in the center of the room. On the side of the wall were little round holes, a board running along, wide enough to lay a book on was fastened to this, it was up as high from the floor as was right reaching point for the children. A board was placed beneath it and this was the desk or served as one.

Adams Lodge No. 189, F. & A. M. was organized in 1863, with Albert Kenyon as first master.

The Fidelity Lodge I. O. O. F. has been an organized body about 25 years.

The first marriage was probably that of Wallace Jackson and Lucy Wilcox in 1837.

The first death was a child of Nelson Dawley which fell into a barrel of rainwater (which served as a cistern) and was drowned.

This child was the first person buried in the cemetery.

The present substantial two story brick union school building at North Adams was erected in 1877 at a cost of $7,000. The first teachers were: F. B. McClellan, principal; Miss Ella A Teed, Intermediate; and Miss Mary E. Hosmer, Primary. Franklin Noyes also was an old teacher.

The village contained in Dec. 1878, 10 stores of various kinds, 4 millinery establishments, 1 tailor, 1 agricultural implement, 4 blacksmith shops, 1 cooper shop, a steam saw mill, 2 harness shops, 1 shoe shop, a post office, a union school building, 3 churches, lodges of Masons and Odd-Fellows, 3 physicians, an extensive wagon and carriage factory owned by Z. Schaad and Co, and a population of nearly 400.

Seth Kempton was by profession a Thompsonian physician. He was the first physician who settled in Adams township and was a very capable man.

The first spelling schools were at Osseo and towards Jonesville.

The Methodist Episcopal church of North Adams was organized in 1836 or 37.

The Congregational church in 1848. The Baptist church was organized early but the date is not known.

The first minister was Rev. Milton Foote. Mr. Foote and his family came from Villa Nova, Chautauqua County, New York and settled in Adrian in the fall of 1830. In 1835 his sons John and James M. Foote came to Adams Township and settled. Their father removed here in the spring of 1836. Rev. Foote was a Methodist minister and at his house in Adams preached the first sermon in the township, and it is said the first in the county. Rev. Roswell Parker also a Methodist minister settled in Adams township in the summer of 1836. Rev. Parker probably preached the first funeral sermon.

The Methodist church was organized in Mr. Foote's barn. The present brick church was the first house of worship owned by the society and was built in 1870. It cost including furniture, etc., about $6,000.

Rev. Roswell Parker formelry a Methodist afterwards became a Congregationalist and reorganized and became the first pastor of the church at North Adams. In 1848 as mentioned before.

The Wesleyan Methodists had organized and built a church about 1840 or '42 but they later disbanded their church and donated it to the Congregationalists, The members united with the Congregational and Methodist churches.

The bob sled with which we are all familiar, was born in Adams Township. The only person living who was present at that time was J. S. Whittaker of Corydon Iowa, he was a former resident of Hillsdale county and this story of the bob sled was told by him.

The bobsled was made by Amos B. Noyes in 1843 and then after an absence of more than sixty one years nearly every farmer had one and has now. Mr. Noyes lived on the farm owned by Mrs, John Holcomb at the time this story was told. He worked the farm in the summer and in the winter he went around selling crockery. The sleds then used had large runners like those of children's sleds now. When Mr. Noyes went over a bump with his load of crockery the sled came down with a bump and a great deal of his crockery was broken. One day he walked along the side of the sled and found that the bumps came just about in the center, so he figured that if he took two little sleds and hitched them together it might do away with this. He tried it and the scheme worked. When he went to the village the next day the men all had to look at this queer sled. They said it looked like two sleds bobbed off so it was called the bob sled and such it is. Mr. Noyes never had a patent on it and probably never thought of it.

It has been ninety one years since the first settlers came here to our village, which then was a wooded wilderness with only Indian trails, but is now a thriving village with fairly good roads, North Adams has thrived and will continue to thrive if the young people of today are as ambitious as those of yesterday.

During the final phase of the World War no man or corporation or institution could raise money without the approval of the Capital Issues Committee of the Treasury Department, which committee in turn would not permit the borrowing of money unless the War Industries Board approved the use to which it was to be put. Thus the City of New York was not permitted to spend $8,000,000 for the building of schools. The City of Philadelphia was prevented from making improvements that in peace time would have been necessary, but in war time were not. Various states, counties and cities, and a vast number of private concerns, were denied the use of money and materials for purposes not necessary for the winning of the war. Each part of the community had to adjust its wants to the whole great undertaking.

III

There have been a great many bills introduced into Congress on the subject of industrial mobilization, some sponsored by great organizations like the American Legion, and others by newspapers and publicists. But it is surprising how little knowledge there was on the part of those who drew up the bills of the practicability and feasibility of so mobilizing our resources that it would be impossible to make as much profit in war as in time of peace. Take into consideration the fact that the following things were being done in 1918:—

General Crowder, who was in charge of the draft, had asked the chairman of the War Industries Board where he could obtain additional men needed for the Army in France with the least possible dislocation of the war making industrial civilian machinery, and we were in the process of replacing male labor with women. By a system of priorities the Board was allocating to our own Army and Navy, to the Allies and to the essential war industries the things they required. It was making priority rulings as to transportation, and they were being followed out by the Railroad Administrator. The Fuel Administrator distributed fuel only on the rulings of the War Industries Board. The Board was engaged in disentangling and removing the many conflicts and competitive efforts involved in labor and buildings that had previously occurred because of lack of any co-ordinating agency. It was allocating power and making regulations for the hitching up of scattered units of power. It was changing munitions orders from congested to less congested districts. It had actually carried into effect an order that no building involving $2,500 or more could be undertaken without the approval of the War Industries Board. No steel, no cement, no material of any kind could be used for any purpose whatsoever unless the War Industries Board permitted it. No steel company could sell over five tons of steel unless approved by the Director of Steel. The Treasury would not permit the raising of money for any industrial or financial operation unless it was approved by the War Industries Board. The President issued an order that no commandeering should be done by the Army, Navy, Shipping Board or Food Administration without the approval of the chairman of the War Industries Board. Every raw material industry, and indeed practically every industry in the country, was organized through appointment of committees, and none of these industries would do any business except under the rulings promulgated by the Board. Standardization in every industry was rapidly proceeding. These rulings were made known through the issuance of official bulletins at irregular intervals and were distributed by the press. We were endeavoring to arrange it so that the fighting forces were to receive those things which they needed and no more, so that whatever was not actually required at the front was left to civilian purposes. Industries were curtailed, but never destroyed; skeletonized, but never killed. Indeed, the use of men, money and materials was rapidly being brought into exactly that condition which I have previously stated to be necessary in case of another war.

If, in addition to this, the President in the future has the authority to fix prices and distribution of materials and labor, rent, and the use of man power, transportation, fuel and all the things necessary for the conduct of the war, any rise in prices will be prevented, even in anticipation of war. There are many who claim that war is caused primarily by the desire of profit. I am not one of those. But if there is anything in this contention this plan will remove the possibility of anybody urging war as a means of making profits. Even if there are no men who desire war as a means of making profit, the fact that profits would be less in war than in peace, and wealth and resources would be directed by the government, might have some active deterring influence on men of great resources. Instead of being passive, they might become active advocates of peace.

There are many people who are, for various reasons, afraid to discuss the subject during peace time and prefer to wait for war. There are also some great manufacturers who oppose any such plan because they were seriously interfered with during the war time. Indeed, it has been the experience of some of those responsible for the industrial mobilization in the World War to remain the objects of venomous attack begun during the time that the necessities of the nation made it imperative to control activities and profits. Some critics were prominent manufacturers, who said: "Tell us what the government wants and we will fill the orders, but don't interfere with the sale of the part of our product that the government does not want to use." That was unthinkable. President Wilson decreed that fair prices for the government were fair prices for civilians. I must say, however, that the vast majority of American manufacturers rose to the situation in such a splendid way as to bring the following commendation from Woodrow Wilson: "They turned aside from every private interest of their own and devoted the whole of their trained capacity to the tasks that supplied the sinews of the whole great undertaking. The patriotism, the unselfishness, the thorough going devotion and distinguished capacity that marked their toilsome labors day after day, month after month, have made them fit mates and comrades to the men in the trenches and on the seas."

There are many men who are afraid that the adoption of this plan by Congress would give an impetus to socialism or communism or sovietism or whatever they may call it, because, they say, "if you show it can be done in war time there will be a demand that it be done in peace time." It cannot be done in peace time. There can be no great undertaking without a strong moving cause. In peace time the moving cause is personal initiative and payment for services performed. The substitute for that in war time is the common danger.

The War Industries Board was the foremost advocate of price fixing and distribution, and it had great power in this field, but when the Armistice came it recognized that peace conditions were being restored, and it was the first to change the war time order of things and to leave to the people themselves the readjustment of their affairs. I am satisfied that it is impossible for the government to do in peace time what I am advocating, although it becomes absolutely necessary in order to conduct a modern war successfully and to conduct it on a non-profiteering basis.

The application of this plan, besides making the nation a coherent unit in time of war, would impress upon every class in society a sense of its own responsibility in such event. If it were known that this universal responsibility would be enforced, no class—social, financial or industrial—could fail to understand that in case of war it would have to bear its share of the burdens involved and would have to make sacrifices of profit, convenience and personal liberty correlatively with those made by the soldiers in the field. To this extent the plan would act as a positive deterrent to any hasty recourse to force in an international controversy.

One thing that has definitely come from the war is the necessity of arranging affairs so that a portion of the population shall not be sent to the front to bear all the physical hardships and their consequences while others are left behind to profit by their absence. If applied at the outbreak, the War Industries Board (as it was functioning at the close of the World War) would prevent this and lessen, if not remove, the social and economic evils that come as the aftermath of war.

Recalling Early Days of American Currency

An innocent dog played his part in the creation of our oldest American bank, says Girard in the Philadelphia Inquirer. When Continental money was not worth a "Continental d—n," Philadelphia staged a financial frolic. A big dog was covered with tar and then plastered over with Continental dollar bills. With drum and fife and flying flags that dog was marched down Chestnut street and around the center of the city by a shouting gang of men and boys. Five days later came Robert Morris' plan for a permanent bank to replace the old Pennsylvania bank, which had done its work and was soon to quit.

Less honor is given to that temporary bank than its record merits. One thing it did was to buy 3,000,000 rations for Washington's soldiers. Another, possibly less worthy object, was the purchase for them of 300 barrels of rum.

Where Speed Fails

Bright people must learn to be tolerant and patient with slower people. Failure to recognize this often gets a foreman into trouble with his men. Naturally, the foreman is likely to be brighter than those under him. And if he can't be tolerant with their slowness he is in for trouble. Trying to hurry naturally slow people is a foolish process. It hurts and irritates.

The duller a man is mentally, the less capacity he has to hurry. He can't hurry. You will never make a foreman or executive unless you are able to learn when your men are going at their best natural speed. If you push them beyond their limit—not your limit, but theirs—there is going to be a break.—Dr. David Mitchell in the American Magazine.

"I have nothing to say," she answered, sitting with chin cupped in hand, face averted.

"Oh, do you mean to say that you prefer selling yourself to that storekeeper, Lascelles, to living in luxury in Montreal, Winnipeg—?"

"You may insult me, monsieur. I have no means of defending myself," she broke in, coldly.

Then Laflamme lost all self-control, and stormed:

"Insult you? Oh, yes! But that is the truth, is it not? You do not love this man, do you? To save your father's future you have agreed to marry him—this man you despise! Oh, I know! He's not fit to look at you—you beauty!"

White-faced, the girl sat with eyes on the floor—silent, as if she did not hear.

"True, you think you hate me now, but you would change," he ran on, talking as if to himself. "You may have heard hard things said of me, but I swear to you, if you will marry me, Denise St. Onge, I'll show you what love is. I'll make your father independent—make you," his voice broke with emotion, "yes, make you happy! I've loved you ever since you played for us that night at Albany—years ago."

Laflamme stopped and looked down with a gesture of helplessness at the woman of stone in the chair. Then he heard the low words: "You forget, monsieur, someone who is still at Ogoke."

"I know how that looks to you," he defended, "but that was over, years ago—years. I've given her a home—couldn't turn her out. But she hates me, tried to knife me, wanted to run away with that American, Steele, this October! She put on black the day she heard he had been drowned on the way home."

There was a long silence, then: "Why were you afraid to have him reach Nepigon?"

Laflamme started, then laughed. "Afraid to have him reach Nepigon? That's funny! He got some supplies and went on. What do you mean?"

Then the girl countered: "Your Indians are not faithful to their master, monsieur. We learned that you had Monsieur Steele ambushed after stealing his ammunition, and forced him to go to his death."

"Do you believe that?" demanded Laflamme, puzzled.

"Is it true?"

"No!"

The room was again silent while the man, famed for his cold nerve, his resource, bit his lips in impotency before the icy calm of this strange girl who so obsessed him. Then he played his trump card.

"So you insist on casting your lot with that rat at Albany? Then it is for me to save you from yourself. I have brought an extra sled. Pack your clothes at once!"

The girl rose to her full height and met his cynical look with resolute eyes, but in her heart was fear.

"You do not dare!" she cried. "They would hunt you from Fort Hope, from Albany, from Nepigon House. In three weeks the police would be at Ogoke. But before the police teams arrived, do you know what they would do to you? They would burn you in your trade-house! You do not dare!"

With open admiration Laflamme watched the play of color and emotion in the face of the frightened girl who confronted him.

"If you'd flush that way when I say I love you," he cried, "I'd give all I have in the world. Why, girl, I'd sell my soul, if you'd look at me, just once, and say you loved me!"

"I despise you!"

The sting of the words cut like the lash of a whip. His self-control, already at the breaking point, crumbled.

"Despise me, do you?" he snarled. "Dare me to do my worst? Suppose I take you at your word? Mon Dieu! I'm mad enough about you to do anything! Who it is, then, you love?" He thrust his passionate face close to hers. "You hate me—you don't want Lascelles! It must be that d—d dead American you're mooning about! Well, he's at the bottom of the Jackfish, and he forgot you before he had been at Ogoke two hours—forgot even your name when he saw Rose!"

She faced his anger proudly, contempt in her bloodless face, until he mentioned Steele, then slowly her knees gave way and she sank in a chair.

"It was that American!" he stormed. "Pity I didn't finish him myself!"

Then something on the table caught his eye—held it! His face went dark with his sinister purpose when, with a quick movement, he seized the violin, raised it above his head, and brought it down with a crash on the table, then dropped it to the floor and trampled it under his feet.

With a groan the girl fell to her knees and, gathering the splintered shell of the violin to her breast, moaned over it as a mother over a stricken child.

At last he had reached her.

At the sound there was a guttural exclamation from the door, and with lifted knife, a wild-eyed Ojibway woman threw herself upon the surprised Laflamme. Leaping back, he caught and parried the thrust with his forearm, then, with his uninjured hand, wrenched the knife from the maddened squaw and hurled her across the room to the floor."

The dazed Ojibway crawled to the pitiful figure on the floor, and circled her with her arms.

While they huddled there on the floor—the girl, the light of whose life had been ruthlessly snuffed out, and the woman of the dark skin, who understood—dog-bells jingled in the clearing as two sleds took up the river trail.

* * * * * * *

Late that afternoon, St. Onge reached the fork of the Stooping river, but the spruce, already blue with shadow, gave back his call, unanswered. He turned into the mouth of the stream and took the Portage lake trail, searching the silent shores for the camp of Michel, but the headman was not there.

"This is very strange," he said, and cut his wood to camp alone.

Deep in the night, St. Onge waked in his blankets, as his dogs gave back the husky challenge to creatures whose scent the freezing air had carried to their nostrils. But the drowsy man did not know that two sled teams were passing below him on the Wailing River trail.

CHAPTER XIV

On the night of Little Jacques' return to Portage lake the four men sat by the fire planning their future movements. It had been a week since the beast had howled or visited the traplines in the district, for David had arranged with the uplake hunters to relay the news of his appearance immediately.

"I'd give ten years of my life if that old bird would sing up there on that ridge this evening," said Steele.

"You'll get your chance before we're done, don't worry. How would you like to draw a bead on your friend Laflamme this evening?"

The Ojibway shook his head. "W'en I tak' Laflamme's trail I feex heem wid de han'. I use no gun on heem. Eef I got hol' dat Black Baptiste, too, I break sometin' more dan hees fing—"

"Leesten!" interrupted Michel.

Out over the silent forest drifted a faint call like the voice of some furred night hunter. The four figures at the fire stiffened. Again the call, louder now, rose on the biting air.

"Where is it?" asked Steele, in doubt of the direction.

Then, when they were convinced that yet another night they were to roll into their blankets, disappointed, baffled, a long wail from the ridge behind the camp brought them to their feet, every nerve alive.

There was a swift stepping into the frozen thongs of snow-shoes and drawing of rifles from skin cases, then taking the bloodhound on the leash, Steele started with his men for the ridge. The huskies, though savage fighters, were left chained to trees, as at night they would cut off on the first game trail and their bedlam of yelping would prevent David and Michel from making the still hunt decided on. Steele with the hound was to circle and pick up the trail of the beast if they missed him.

As they swung through the blue gloom of spruce and fir, the voice shifted from its wailing to the hunting screams of the great cats, then as swiftly dropped to the yowling and mewing of the mating season, climaxing, as at Wailing River and Big Feather lake, in shrieks of agony, in moans of a creature tortured beyond endurance of blood and flesh and nerve.

Three of the men who hunted the voice on the ridge had toiled long and suffered much for this moment, but at their heels moved a short figure whose flesh was cold with the chill of fear. Little Jacques gripped his rifle grimly and followed, thinking of the wife and children back at Wailing River.

At the foot of the ridge Michel and David left Steele to make their stalk from two directions while he worked to the rear with the dog and Little Jacques. Once on a fresh trail the hound would hang until he ran down his quarry. In the soft snow his pace would be slow, so the men on shoes in time would come up with him. And he would need them if the thing turned and waited at bay—how great would be his necessity the torn body at Stooping river only too well indicated.

They had traveled for an hour when the hound abruptly stopped, sniffed the snow at his feet, and excitedly strained at his leash. To Steele's eyes the flat floor of the snow lay unbroken in the darkness, but the Indian on his knees whispered in terror: "Eet ees beeg trail!"

"Good!" And the hound free, plunged ahead into the murk. Shortly, his deep voice boomed through the forest and the hunt was on.

As they swung through, the blue gloom of spruce was less deep, the great dog left them. Again, as they followed, the voice on the shoulder of the hill defiled the night. As it rose in crescendo, a rifle shot sliced it short off. Far above, the hound gave voice. Then silence fell on the forest.

"They've seen him!" said Steele. "He may back track; keep a lookout. Don't shoot too quick or we'll turn him!"

There was no reply. He looked for his companion, but Little Jacques had gone.

Throwing the bolt of his Mannlicher to clear it of frost and ease the action, Steele kept on up the ridge. For minutes now, he had not heard the voice of the hound, when again the resonant bass boomed through the silence above him. The dog had turned. The thing was headed back. Loosing his skinning-knife in its sheath, the man cocked his rifle and waited, kneeling on a shoe, his eyes boring into the blackness.

Near him, and below, was an opening in the timber. Again, the hound bayed—closer now. The beast was taking his back tracks. Then Steele saw it.

Bounding from the cover of the scrub on the edge of the opening, a dark shape stopped, and reared upright, as if listening—when the Mannlicher spat.

The beast leaped back into the black wall of spruce. Again, the rifle flamed into the murk.

Still crouched on a knee, the man listened, rifle rigid. Sights useless he had fired by instinct. There had been no thud of bullet in flesh. Could he have missed?

Slipping two shells into the magazine, he circled in the timber, lifting his shoes to avoid the click. Blind now, for the moon was masked, he listened for heavy breathing in the scrub he faced—then the hound plunged past and he knew he had missed.

Following the dog, Steele turned down the ridge, but in an hour was distanced. So he stopped in a cedar swamp, cut wood with his belt ax, and scooping out the snow with his shoe, lighted a fire.

In the cover of the thick cedar the hot fire soon warmed him and with back against a trunk he dozed, only to waken with a start as a hand touched his shoulder. He blinked into the faces of David and Michel.

"Fooled us again!" groaned the disheartened Steele.

Heaping up the fire the three men dozed until daylight, then took the trail of the beast and his pursuer through the snow.

Somewhere ahead, Steele felt that the pursuit was over. Somewhere, miles away, the beast had tired in the black hours and turned at bay to battle in the snow with his relentless foe; or else in terror of the voice of the thunder which he could not shake from his heels, had treed.

Up over ridges and into creek bottoms traveled the anxious men, stopping to listen for the voice of the dog. But the cold silence of sunrise gripped the forest.

At last the tracks led into a heavy stand of young spruce. The men separated, and cautiously made their way through the close growth.

Suddenly the blood of Steele chilled as he heard the voice of Michel. "By gar! Poor ol' Pete!"

Forcing his way through the saplings, he found the Iroquois bending over a blood-smeared shape, stiff in death. The hide of the dog hung in strips from the slashes of terrible claws, while a torn throat marked the death snap of the fangs of the Windigo.

Novel Nest

At the last meeting of the British Ornithologists' club, Mr. A. L. Butler exhibited a "nest" from Trinidad, which was merely a hollow formed by the rotting out of the soft pith at the top of a broken-off sapling. The breadth of the top of the stump was only just sufficient to contain the single egg, and the egg, on the cup-and-ball principle, fitted the cavity so neatly that it could not be lifted out with the fingers. The bird incubates in a perfectly erect position with its head and neck stretched stiffly upwards, and its tail pressed to the side of the stump, of which its upright figure seems to form a part. The species have adopted the habit of sitting bolt upright on similar stumps whether incubating or not.

Brook Trout Driven Into Prepared Trap

Trout fishermen of today who go forth to fill their hampers by the use of the latest thing in equipment are wondering what would be the result of a fishing expedition along lines recounted by S. V. Rehart, pioneer of the Lakeview (Ore.) section, who had the experience in 1871, says the San Francisco Chronicle.

In the year in question, Rehart, then twenty-one years old, journeyed with his parents from California to Oregon. One day, on what is known as Hat creek, some Indians came into camp and said they were going fishing. Having an appetite for trout, young Rehart went along and was initiated into the first and only fish drive he ever saw.

Reaching the selected spot on the creek, three of the Indians stripped, supplied themselves with short poles and waded into the stream, making much noise and threshing the water with the poles.

Eventually along came the wading Indians and ahead of them leaped frightened trout, to be diverted into the trap, from which they were captured by hand and tossed on the bank.

Jessie's Joy Ride

Freddie and Jessie had been playing one of those old-fashioned games with forfeits, and the girl had been ordered to give the young man ten kisses.

"Let's see," said Jessie, pausing for breath, "that's seven, isn't it?"

"Only six," corrected Freddie.

"Seven, I think."

"No, six."

"Seven!"

"Six!"

"Look here," said the girl, wearily, "sooner than have any argument, we had better start all over again."

Influence of the Cross

A Chicago minister says the electrically lighted cross on the peak of the new Methodist temple in the heart of Chicago's business district has uplifted the business morals of at least four men in downtown offices who have unburdened their souls to him. He surmises that the lighted cross' influence for good is immeasurably wide and deep.

—The High School Girls Glee Club will give a concert Thursday evening April 29 at 8:00.

Bert Brown of near Jonesville who has for some years been quite active in the Farm Bureau work has been chosen as manager to conduct a campaign for new members in this county. The Bureau will put on a special drive.

The stretch of road north of Moscow, leading to Horton over the hard and stony hills has been more or less a bugbear for many years to Jackson county supervisors, and there is now a heavy demand for gravel there, since it is a direct route to Jackson. The road has been thrown over to the state, and if the authorities should decide to gravel it this season the traffic between North Adams and Jackson will be seriously interfered with, as M-23 will be torn up M-17 from Jonesville, will probably be logical route though several miles out of the way.

The vacancy in the principalship of the Hudson Public Schools has been filled by Mr. Virgil Hunt of North Adams, whose contract was received Tuesday April 13 by the Secretary of the Board of Education.

He is a man of experience in dealing with the public and young people, and has been engaged in executive work.—Hudson Post.

It might be added that Rev. Hunt resigned his pastorate here to take effect in August and the members of this church and citizens of the village are very sorry indeed to lose Rev. Hunt and his estimable wife from our midst.

These changes were voted upon at a well attended meeting held April 16th.

Death of Mary Wells Mather

Mrs. E. O. Mather, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper J. Wells, passed away at her home in Lyons, Mich., Friday, April 5, after an illness of eight months. She was born in Camden October 6th, 1875, and came with her parents to Adams township where most of her early life was spent.

She attended district school and town school and graduated from North Adams high school with the Class of 1894. She afterward attended Hillsdale College and taught at Quincy, North Adams and Lansing, Mich., and Lanark, Illinois. Nineteen years ago she was married to Rev. E. O. Mather, formerly pastor of the Methodist church at North Adams.

To them were born one daughter, Grace, and a son, George, who with the husband, a stepson and step-daughter, survive, also six brothers, Herbert, Percy Howard and Arthur Wells of this vicinity, William of Pittsford and Winfield of Midland, two sisters, Mrs. Grace Westcott of Jerome and Mrs. Bertha Duguid of Grosse Point, Mich, besides more distant relatives.

She was a devoted christian worker and a splendid mother in the home, where her presence will be painfully missed.

Funeral services were held at Lyons on Tuesday, Rev. Hoag, district superintendent, officiating, assisted by other ministers, and interment was at Albion, where services at the grave were conducted by Albion pastors.

Rev. and Mrs. Mather had been at Lyons three years, and had formed many friendships there, as in all places where they had served. They were stationed at Evart, Buchanan, Pentwater, Sparta and Lyons consecutively, and we understand Rev. Mather expects to be retired soon, and will reside at Albion.

North Adams friends extend sympathy.

The school play "This Way Out" last Friday evening was quite well attended and the parts well taken. Music was furnished by Harry Hayhoe, Fay Stevens and Clark Pierce. A surplus of about $20 is reported from proceeds to be used for school purposes.

A party for Ruel VanWert was held at the home of his parents Claude VanWert and wife in this village on Saturday evening. About 34 were present and refreshments were served. Helen Keller of Jackson and Inez Myers of Sturgis were also present from away.

On Friday evening next April 23rd, Town Line Grange will entertain the Boys and Girls Club. The Boys and Girls will furnish a program of speaking and music and the Grange will serve potluck supper. It is hoped and desired that all members of the Clubs and their parents will endeavor to attend.

Miss Ethel Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Rogers living north west of this village, who has been at Howell Sanitarium for some time being treated for tuberculosis symptoms is now on the road to recovery and the doctors report that she will be completely cured and return home in about two or three months. This is one of the many cases which was taken at the earliest stages of the disease thus making a cure possible.

What They Are Doing With Your Money

It strikes us that the Consumers Power Co. which owns so much equipment and lines in the whole of Michigan, is quite powerful, especially in a financial way, and in the course of five years they might be so powerful the price of electric power would be swayed by them. They are doing considerable developing in many parts of the state, and at Jackson which is headquarters for southern Michigan, they have just started foundations for a mammoth building which extends clear through the block from Main to Pearl street just west of the Congregational church property.

An excavation has been made and at the bottom a big pile driver is sweating and coughing while it sends the forty and fifty-foot piles into the clay subsoil to support walls of masonry. These piles are of white cedar 18 to 20 inches in diameter at the butt and they are soaked in creosote so as to withstand decay. They are shod with a cast iron point on the small end.

By means of a donkey engine these piles are set up on end as nice as you please under a hammer which weighs several tons with a swing of about three feet. This hammer is attached to a piston rod from an upright steam cylinder, and as the pile sinks the hammer cylinder and all, follows it down. delivering its blows about as fast as the average blacksmith would tunk the iron. We suppose these piles must extend to hard-pan rock and are practically everlasting resting in the air-tight soil. This is slightly cheaper than the Chicago method of sinking deep wells to rock and filling them with concrete although not so substantial.

We did not learn what the building would cost complete, but into it will go the money of all who own stock in the Consumer's Power Company, and will bring to Jackson an immense administrative organization from all parts of the state.

Trials Of The Editor

Occasionally there bobs up a man or woman who seems to think all the editor has to do is to smoke high grade cigars, write a quip or two for the editorial column and then go out and collect a few hundred dollars. This idea is fully as fanciful as the opinion advanced by many that whisky is good to drink. The fellow who drinks "forty-rod" hooch and the other one who thinks we are easy money are real similar.

Now and then we get a subscription from the old stand-bys who have never been known to default in payment, and sometimes the chap pays up whom we didn't expect, but as a rule, these uncertainties are few and far between. The subscribers who live in California, Washington, Florida and Missouri, are trust-worthy to the end. They always pay, and never think of claiming we have pressed something upon them they did not want, but there are perhaps a quarter dozen right here in Michigan. living within a few miles of the office who are crooks. They come in and subscribe some time or other, and we start sending the paper to them. Presently their subscription expires but they never emit one peep. Instead they go regularly to the mail box and grab the home paper, read it through and perhaps lend it to Neighbor So and So, who reads it also. This is kept up so long as we care to send the paper, but if we should send a statement with an insinuation we would appreciate a settlement, they ignore it entirely, in fact they might as well be blind, deaf, dumb and foolish as far as results are concerned. They neither hear, see or comprehend.

Perhaps we might meet these interesting birds some day and mention it—but as a rule they avoid going any place where we might be. Usually we would need a search warrant to get in touch with them. The law is not very specific on this business but the facts are that no sane jury would allow such a bird to get by without at least paying what he owed, if the case came to a show-down. If ever the country was cursed with an abominable nuisance, it is with this class of citizens, and we have deacons in the church and professed followers of the Lamb of Galilee to positively refuse to pay their subscription. May their tribe decrease.

We once knew a dear saintly old soul, who made long prayers, and sang "Jesus paid it all" with great gusto. We afterward found that this was perfectly correct as far as he was concerned. All the bills Jesus didn't pay were never paid.

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

When America Was Young

In 1763 times were so hard in Virginia that the assembly passed an act forcing clergymen to share the afflictions of their parishioners. The king was appealed to and he annulled the act. Salaries were ordered paid in full. James Maury, a clergyman of Hanover parish, then brought suit. Patrick Henry was employed by the people to plead their cause. So great was his eloquence that the jury made an award of one penny.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate Ratifies Settlement of Italy's Debt—Turkey Alarmed by Mussolini.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SETTLEMENT of Italy's war debt to the United States, as arranged by the joint debt commissions, was finally approved by the senate, despite the efforts of a considerable number of both parties led by Senators Borah and Reed. The vote in favor of the funding of the debt was 54 to 33. Reed of Missouri voted in the affirmative in order that he might make, next day, a quite useless motion to reconsider so that Senator Howell's amendments might be debated.

The Italian agreement provides for the funding of a debt of $2,042,000,000, including principal and accrued interest, over a period of 62 years. During the first five years Italy is to pay $5,000,000 annually without interest. After the first five years interest is fixed at one-eighth of 1 per cent for ten years and then increases, for successive ten-year periods, to one-fourth of 1 per cent, one-half of 1 per cent, three-fourths of 1 per cent, 1 per cent, and, for the last seven years, 2 per cent.

When the agreement is fully carried out, for an original debt of $1,648,000,000 the United States will have received during the period a total of $2,407,000,000, of which $759,000,000 is interest.

The calculation that the Italian funding represents a settlement of 28 cents on the dollar is based on the difference between interest paid by Italy for 62 years and the 4¼ per cent paid by the United States government to Liberty bond holders who furnished the money for the war loans.

Consideration of the debt settlements with Belgium and other minor countries was begun by the senate, with every prospect that the terms agreed upon would be ratified.

Dispatches from Paris said Premier Briand had informed the foreign affairs committee of the French senate that Ambassador Berenger and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon had agreed in principle on a plan for funding the French debt. It was understood the political and commercial debts would be merged and that France would pay annuities, beginning at $25,000,000 and rising to $100,000,000, until 62 years have elapsed. While the "safeguard clause" is to be abandoned, France's capacity to pay at any time in the future might be revised on the basis of the amount it was possible to collect from Germany.

REPRESENTATIVE GORMAN of Illinois, who said he wanted to save his colleagues in other states from being defeated on the World court issue as was Senator McKinley, offered in the house a resolution repudiating the Burton resolution approving American adhesion to the World court, passed by the house a year ago. The Gorman resolution would have the house of representatives express the hope that the United States will immediately take the necessary steps to keep out and stay out of the World court. The resolution provides further that the house "express its disapproval of the League of Nations and its agency, the World court, and declare that it will not make any appropriation for dues or other expenditures of the United States as an integral part of the discredited World court or of the British seven-votes-to-our-one League of Nations."

Secretary of State Kellogg, expressing the administration view that no new agreement is necessary to give effect to the conditions and reservations on which the United States is prepared to adhere to the permanent court of international justice, has formally declined to send a delegate to Geneva in September to explain those conditions and reservations to the conference of the forty-eight signatory powers of the court. He pointed out that the senate reservations provide specifically that they must be accepted by an exchange of notes between the United States and each of the powers and said he saw no difficulty in the way of securing the assent of each signatory in this way. Greece already has accepted the American reservations.

BENITO MUSSOLINI and his Roman empire plans continue to excite and disturb the Old world. The latest story is that Italy and Greece have made a secret treaty directed against Turkey and that if they are able to carry out their plans Italy will get a huge slice of southern Asia Minor including the port of Selenti and that Greece will recover Smyrna and Constantinople and the contiguous territory. Jugo-Slavia is to be given a piece of Albania, all of which country she wants. England's neutrality it is hoped can be obtained through support of her claims to Mosul and promises to end the Fascist agitation in India; and the assistance of France is to be the price of help in the pacification of the Druses in Syria.

That there is something in this story is indicated by the alarm manifested by Turkey. She has been calling out her classes of recruits for intensive military training, and great military maneuvers are to be held by President Mustapha Kemal Pasha next month in western Asia Minor. Extensive fortification against the Greeks along the Thracian frontier is reported. Naturally Turkey is eagerly seeking British support. It was said in London that Sir Austen Chamberlain let Angora know that if it wanted real protection it must join the League of Nations as soon as possible. The Angora government is divided, some leaders favoring the plan to yield to England in the matter of Mosul, and others urging that the support of Russia be accepted and the British defied. Kemal is said to be of the latter party.

FEDERAL officers, bishops and other clergymen, heads of reform organizations and various other persons followed one another in rapid succession before the senate committee to tell of the benefits wrought by prohibition and to decry the suggestion of weakening the enforcement law. United States District Attorney Edwin A. Olson of Chicago was one of the witnesses, and he at least succeeded in arousing the anger of Chicago's officials. Making vigorous charges of lax enforcement of the criminal laws in Chicago, he said it was safer for a man there to commit daylight robbery with a gun than to violate the Volstead act, and added that that act has not yet had an honest chance in Chicago and that prior to 1923 it had no chance whatever.

"I do not know," he said, "how many stills are operating in Chicago, but there are many. It is safe to assume, however, that there is not a still of importance in any police precinct that is not known to the police in that precinct and that it would not be a very big job for 5,000 policemen to pull out by the roots every outlaw still in Chicago in twenty-four hours."

He said the citizens of Chicago have not "intestinal fortitude enough to provide themselves with the kind of local government that will send murderers and robbers where they belong."

In a fine frenzy of rage Mayor Dever, accompanied by Chief of Police Collins, started at once for Washington and in the last hours of the hearing they told the senators that Mr. Olson was a prevaricator and, in effect, was "all wet." He asserted the only men in Chicago who tried honestly to enforce the Volstead act were Chief Collins and himself, and that Mr. Olson never did act until they forced him to do so.

Dr. J. M. Doren, chief chemist for General Andrews, presented figures to show that District Attorney Buckner of New York grossly exaggerated the amount of industrial alcohol diverted to illegal uses. Father Curran of Wilkesbarre contradicted the testimony of Father Kasaczun concerning conditions in the anthracite region. Charles Stelzle denied that organized labor was a unit for modification of the Volstead act. And S. L. Strivings, representative of the National Grange, testified the farmers were for strict enforcement, admitting under cross-examination that they would be opposed to repeal of section 29 which permits farmers to make wine and cider for their own use. These were only a few of the more important of the many witnesses heard.

New York's legislature passed a bill for a state referendum on whether congress should modify the enforcement act to permit the manufacture, sale and use of beverages not in fact intoxicating, as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective states.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New York handed down a decision which seriously affects the rum treaties with Great Britain and Norway and may even render them invalid. The decision held that the treaties under which the government had been boarding vessels within an hour's steaming distance of the coast do not constitute a law extending territorial limits of the United States beyond the three-mile limit. It was rendered in dismissing the libel proceedings brought by the government against the Sagatind, a Norwegian vessel, and the Diamantina, which flew the British flag.

PEACE negotiations of the French, Spanish and Riff representatives reached a deadlock and the conférence was adjourned indefinitely to permit the delegates to get further instructions from their governments. Meanwhile a truce was declared in Morocco, which may, however, be broken at any moment. General Simon, chief of the French delegation, says France is determined to make peace with the Riffians. He declared: "Our firm intention is not to resume war, despite certain misunderstandings and exceptions taken by the Riffian delegation in their communique. We shall resume war only if we are absolutely driven to it."

PEKING'S fate and that of the Chinese government hangs in the balance. When the national army abandoned the capital President Tuan resumed the control but a day or two later, as troops from Marshal Chang's Manchurian army entered the city he fled to Tientsin with his adherents. Marshal Wu Pei-fu has not, at this writing, declared himself and remains with his forces outside Peking. Public bodies are urging that he and Chang get together and form a government, but in Canton it is predicted that the two marshals will clash and that complete chaos in northern China will result. The Canton government sees in this a chance to overthrow militarism and unite the country on the principles of Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

DAUGHTERS of the American Revolution, holding their thirty-fifth continental congress, were addressed by President Coolidge, who called especial attention to the increasing disregard for voting, warning that it threatened the doom of the republic.

"The perilous aspect of this situation," said the President, "lies in its insidiousness. With the broadening of popular powers, the direct election of practically all public officials, and the direct nomination of most of them, there is no opportunity for an expression of the public will except at the ballot box. We are placing our reliance on the principle of self-government. But if the people fail to vote, a government will be developed which is not their government."

Mrs. Alfred Brosseau of Connecticut was elected president general of the society without opposition.

OGDEN T. M'CLURG of Chicago, wealthy head of the publishing house that bears his name and one of the country's leading explorers and yachtsmen, died suddenly of cerebral hemorrhage soon after returning from a trip to Yucatan. During the war he was a lieutenant commander in the navy and chief of staff for Captain Moffett at the Great Lakes station.

Another notable death of the week was that of Sir Squire Bancroft, veteran actor-manager who was known as the dean of the English stage.

TRIAL of Col. A. S. Williams of the marines by court-martial in San Diego on charges of intoxication preferred by Gen Smedley Butler is believed to have resulted in his conviction, though the verdict has not been made public. The case attracted wide attention because at the time of the alleged offense General Butler had just been the colonel's guest at a party where cocktails were served.

Ionia—The "Green for Governor" movement of Ionia county, sponsored by the Young Men's club, was strengthened considerably when the Saranac business men, farmer guests and American Legion members heartily indorsed the genial executive for the state office and voted to become affiliated with the booster organization. Neal, who resigned early in the year to take a similar position in Birmingham, Ala. Eckert is a former athletic star at Michigan State college and has been in charge of recreation for some time in a Grand Rapids center. Increased recreational activities are planned for Pontiac this summer.

Lansing—The frenzied figuring of highway costs and bombastic talk that threatened the summary removal from office of four elective state officials by Governor A. J. Groesbeck, after they had begun to question the highway costs, ended abruptly when the so-called rebel quartet accepted the governor's invitation to them to draft a compromise that would end the deadlock that was holding up state highway construction work.

Hudson—Dr. J. M. Timms, local veterinary, has reported hog cholera on the farms of Dan Monahan, of Hudson township, and W. D. Ebbitt, just across the road, in Medina township. Dr. W. J. Madell, of Jackson, federal hog cholera inspector in this district, was called, verified the diagnosis and placarded the farms. Three hogs have died on the Monahan farm and on the Ebbitt farm. The rest of the hogs on both farms have been double immuned against the disease.

Lansing—A highway program comprising 200 miles of new pavement and 140 miles of new gravel road has been prepared by Frank F. Rogers, state highway commissioner, for approval of the administrative board at its next meeting. This program, he estimates, will absorb the $8,000,000 released for new contracts by the action of the road committee members recently, when they agreed to mortgage $6,000,000 of the 1927 highway receipts to continue road building this year.

Ann Arbor—In addition to caring for the athletic situation of the university by approving of the stadium with a seating capacity of 70,000, the board of regents at the last meeting accepted several gifts and made several changes in the university activities. A new course in library science was approved, and the dental college requirements were tightened so that, beginning in 1927, two years of college work and three years of dental work alone will fit a candidate for the degree.

Flint—Flint residents are discussing a plan to recomend Miss Viola Gregory, 19 years old, for a Carnegie medal for her part in the recent fire which destroyed the Dryden Building here. Miss Gregory, the elevator operator in the burning building displayed remarkable courage and presence of mind by continuing to run her elevator until taken by the arm by firemen and pulled from her post. By the time she made the last trips the smoke was so thick that she could only guess at the proper places to stop.

Burlington—Burlington village is now without a village marshal. In the last two years Ed. Smith, the marshal, made only two arrests. He was re-appointed by Henry Mosure, the new village president, but declined. Now the president will have to act as marshal if occasion arises for one.

Adrian—Arnold Wilson, 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Wilson, of Blissfield, is dead of injuries sustained while at play during the school recess period. Failing to tell his parents of his injuries until several days later, caused the child's death, as peritonitis had already developed when a physician was called.

Ann Arbor—More than 100 doctors, from medical societies of Lapeer, Genesee, Ingham and Livingston counties, were guests of the University of Michigan hospital staff for a tour of inspection and series of meetings here on April 28. The visiting doctors attended a number of clinics, held during the day for their benefit.

Lansing—Regrouping of Michigan towns under the various rate charges of the Michigan Bell Telephone company and changes in the rate so that the more profitable communities will not be required to sustain those operated at a loss, looms as a possible outcome of the telephone rate hearing which has re-opened before the public utilities commission.

Lansing—Warning to all motorbus operators against the present tendency toward fast schedules is being sent to every permit holder by the Michigan Public Utilities Commission. Hilton, field secretary of the National Probation association, who has been making a survey of adult and juvenile probation and court work in Calhoun county, made a report with recommendations for development of the work, at a meeting of interested citizens at the city hall recently. Manistee—Richard Petoskey, 19 years old, has confessed to three Manistee burglaries, a holdup at Ludington and two in Muskegon, according to Thomas Grady, chief of police here, who arrested Petoskey as the latter drove into town in an expensive automobile. The youth said that he found the automobile in the woods near Pontiac but the officers are investigating.

Grand Rapids—Henry Meretsky, a truck driver being sued in justice court here by Clifford A. Mitts, a cigar dealer, as the outgrowth of a traffic accident last summer in which Mitts automobile was rammed by Meretsky's truck, declared in court that two bathing girls were the indirect cause of the accident. Meretsky said that as he was driving the two girls appeared, clad only in bathing suits. Meretsky turned his head to look at the girls, he says, and his truck ran into the Mitts car.

Grand Rapids—A woman as president of the United States would be equal to her job, Mrs. Olive Joy Wright, of Cleveland, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Womens' Clubs, declared in an address at a dinner given in her honor by the Grand Rapids Business and Professional Women's Club. "Business men, college professors and lawyers have made successful presidents," she said. "Evidently there is no particular mystery about the kind of knowledge required to be president."

Giant Turtles a Nuisance

Thousands of carnivorous, giant snapping turtles, averaging two feet in diameter, abound in the lake country between Fort William and Winnipeg, according to Joseph Spoon, full-blooded Indian trapper. This is something new in the natural history of this country, but Spoon says he should know because he lost hundreds of dollars through them. Beavers trapped under the ice are eaten piecemeal, he declared, and turtles are increasing in numbers. It would take a sledge hammer to crack their shells and some of the turtles found on lake shores have been declared to be a century and a half old.

State Funds Are Not Depleted

From the River Rouge Herald we copy some remarks made by Highway Commissioner Rogers, Secretary DeLand and Superintendent of Instruction Johnson in regard to the finances of Michigan for maintaining public roads.

"It is admitted that the $1,000,000 paid to counties recently on overdue indebtedness was taken from this year's weight tax instead of last, as provided by law; also there will not be any money to pay to the counties as provided by the legislature."

"The matter of maintaining the state trunk line highways is causing the state officials a lot of worry. Without money it is impossible to keep men on the job. Counties have refused to take these contracts because the money is not forth-coming."

We might say in conclusion that Governor Groesbeck went before these gentlemen recently and the way he took the wind out of their sails was a caution. They have been forced to admit their mistake as the Governor has dug up a considerable amount of state fund they were in blissful ignorance of. For some unknown reason the three gents have pulled off the job, and peace and quietude now reign supreme at Lansing on the Grand.

As a matter of fact the entire lot of state officials are at present putting up a game of politics, which is the principal occupation at the present time, and nothing will be definitely settled concerning road work until the election is settled.

The three first mentioned gentlemen are quoted as saying: "Once the public learns how careless their money has been handled, there is going to be all kinds of graft talk and it is apparent that some members of the Administrative Board propose to be on the safe side."

Now, the question naturally arises why so much anxiety concerning graft? This is what you would call a "poser."

The Lansing Imbroglio

The great high vaudeville three men act which has been constantly on the boards at Lansing for the past few weeks has finally petered out and the gas bubble has been pricked. Highway Commissioner Rogers, Thomas Johnson and the other gentlemen who made the accusations against Governor Groesbeck have been found to be absolutely unreliable. In other words the whole thing was a farce and these fellows pulled from the deal when it came to a show-down. A little more regard for the tax payers and a little less for political wire pulling is what we need in Michigan. It now develops that there is yet a surplus of road monies in the state treasury—and that there is still enough to complete several miles of concrete as planned by Groesbeck.

Now that peace and plenty reign supreme at Lansing the road executives will settle down to hard pan and perhaps the road work will go on as before.

The next high diving back action self-cocking act will probably be pulled off when the time comes to accept some of the new paving which have been built by prison work.

State Farmers To Seek Swine Honors

Encouraged by the present high prices of breeding swine, Michigan farmers are exerting special care to save the spring pig crop this year, and as a result interest has been added to the annual Ton Litter contest which is conducted by the animal husbandry men at M. S. C.

The weight contest, the object of which is to bring a single litter of pigs to a total weight of a ton in six months develops great competition among the state's leading swine growers. Last year 18 of the 103 litters entered reached the ton goal. An even larger entry list and a greater proportion of "finishers" is looked for in 1926.

Any farmer in the state is eligible to enter the contest, with a litter farrowed between February 15 and May 15. Registration, which is free, may be made with any county agricultural agent in the state, or direct with the animal husbandry department at M. S. C.

A long list of prizes and awards are offered the winning litters of the different breeds in the annual contests.

Advises Large Sugar Beet Crop This Year

Sugar beets stand out as one of the most desirable and certain crops for 1926 in Michigan beet areas, according to Prof. J. F. Cox head of the crops department at M. S. C.

The companies are giving the same contract as prevailed during the past year, which insures a seven dollar minimum and offers the opportunity for a share in increase if domestic price of sugar rises, says Professor Cox.

"In other states, with but one exception, the price offered farmers is six dollars this year. After the severe losses which occurred in the fall last year, many sugar beet growers were discouraged, but it must be pointed out that the season was a most unusual one. Generally, this crop is exceedingly dependable.

"The farmer who gets a large yield per acre makes the most from sugar beets. By thoroughly fitting the seed bed and using fertilizer and good cultural methods, large tonnages can be secured. Instead of an average of eight to ten tons, it is easily possible for most growers to get fourteen to sixteen tons per acre, following good methods.

"In view of the fact that danger of over-production is removed by the guarantee, sugar beets are the most logical crop to be carried on a large acreage of Michigan's favored sugar beet regions."

Operations have already commenced on M-23, east of Moscow and west of Jonesville to improve and widen the right-of-way for paving which by the end of the summer will be completely concreted to the Indiana line. In the process several cemeteries will have to be disturbed, among them being the Plains and Blackmar burial grounds. Several bodies will have to be disinterred to make room for the modern highway. The cost of this stretch of paving will not appear, but it looks as if the immensity of it would scare the tax-payer into conniptions. The state quarrel which has developed at Lansing over highway finance, is probably a farce.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

This is the third of a series of letters written by Elizabeth Chandler to her aunt in Philadelphia in 1831.

Hazelbank, 4th Mo. 15th day 1831
My dear Aunt:

I have thinking so much about Philadelphia, that I seem almost bewildered in finding that I am not actually among you. I suppose the city as usual in this month is thronged with country Friends, some of whom, probably I should like to see, and attend the meeting of the "Free Produce Society" too. I suppose it will be held this evening. I can only imagine what is transacted. As to ourselves, here in Michigan, we are passing quietly along through the usual but not very striking diversity of a country life.

Brother Thomas is very much occupied with the spring business. He has been ploughing, etc. He has got an excellent yoke of oxen, well broken and gentle, and I dare say thee would scarcely know him, could thee look out yonder and see him, enveloped in a large tow frock, beside them busily employed in logging. We have not yet begun to garden; the spot we intend for it is just before the house and we shall have it fenced and laid out just as soon as Thomas has time to attend to it. It is yet too early in the season to do much at planting, and the spring with us is said to be more backward than usual.

The navigation from Buffalo is expected to open by the 15th or 20th of the month, and as soon as the canal is clear of ice, I expect there will be a great influx of strangers into the territory. There are two lines of stages to be run from Detroit to Tecumseh this summer, and there is talk of having a steamboat stop at Munroe. There is also an addition to be made to the Buffalo and Detroit line of steamboats and the price of passage is to be lessened.

Since I wrote last, I have paid a little visit of a couple of days at Tecumseh. Musgrove and Abbie Evans were here and insisting on my returning with them, promising, they would send me on: whenever I wished it; so I remained with them from First Day evening until Third day evening, and even that I thought a long time to leave aunt Ruth.

The "Saturday Evening Post" is always a welcome visitor, and finds eager auditors, as thee cannot doubt; it seems almost like conversing with a Philadelphian, but do not pay the postage, aunt Jane for it must be considerably more inconvenient than merely to drop it in the mail box, and we can settle quarterly. Letters etc. are now usually about two weeks in reaching us, and in summer I should suppose the time would be considerably shorter. Mail day stands out in a kind of bold relief, and we have no sooner heard tiding from the postoffice on one week than we begin to look forward to the same important day on the next. We had been looking two or three weeks for thy last letter, and should have been a good deal uneasy had it not reached us as it did.

The walking is now good so that we can get out much oftener than during the winter, and shall probably have more frequent visitors.

John Lovett's two daughters were here day before yesterday. His family are all well and very much pleased with Michigan.

Our neighbor Comstock sent us over a pair of chickens to stock our farm yard, so that with the cattle, pigs, etc. it really begins to look quite farm like, and I hope before long (by the time thee gets out here) to have quite a pretty garden.

I should like very much, when there is an opportunity to have some slips of honeysuckle, if thee can conveniently procure them.

Last month was the sugar season. I wished to have seen the management of a sugar bush, but I did not compass it, as there were none very near here. The fresh maple sugar is delicious.

10th. We have had beautiful weather for several days past and the vegetation is coming forward rapidly Brother, yesterday, brought me some beautiful wild flowers, one of the spring's earliest, and I expect the openings will soon be covered with them.

We have heard the wolves howling around us at night several times since I wrote last, but Thomas is the only one yet to have been favored with a sight of them. It seems strange, sometimes, when I am rambling to think that the ground on which I am treading has perhaps but a little while before been passed over by their feet, or those of the good red deer. But they, the wolves, are not now numerous and every season decreases their numbers.

I have been at work today, preparing some flower beds about the house, and I suppose we shall soon be deeply immersed in all the mysteries of gardening.

I suppose the next time I visit Philadelphia, I may have a ride on a railroad, but really if there are no more comfortable than some short patches of railroad that we have in our country, we may not envy you any continuity of them, but our rails unfortunately run the wrong way, across the road,

Neighbor Comstock has offered to teach me to spin this summer. I feel some ambition to make brother a coat of my own spinning, but we shall not, I expect, keep sheep for a year or two, as they are rather troublesome stock for a new settler on account of the wolves, though Comstock's I believe have been attacked but once since we have been here. The howl of a wolf is not near so dismal a sound as I had expected, much less so than that of a dog. It is softer and more belllike, and in the stillness of the night, sounds not very unmusical. But it is a strange contrast with the "past twelve o'clock" of the watchman.

B. D. Chandler, Attorney for Plaintiff, Hudson, Mich. 45t6

Mr. Hoover already was doing much to perfect his control of food products and prices. There was also talk of fixing rents, and in some cities this was done.

If we were to start, in the event of another war, at the place where we were industrially when the World War ended, the President, acting through an agency similar to the War Industries Board, would have the right to fix prices of all things as of a date previous to the declaration of war when there was a fair peace time relationship among the various activities of the nation. It would be illegal to buy, sell, serve or rent at any other than these prices. Brakes would be applied to every agency of inflation before the hurtful process started. An intelligent control of the flow of men, money and materials would be imposed, instead of having the blind panic heretofore ensuing on the first appearance of the frantic demands of war. The Draft Board would have before it the rulings of the priority committee, together with the estimated needs of every business and profession in its relationship to the conduct of the war, and men would be selected accordingly. The Draft Board could more intelligently decide, with the advice of the priority committee, many of the problems with which it would be faced. There would be no sending of men to the trenches who were needed for expert industrial war work and then bringing them back again. Businesses not necessary to the winning of the war would be curtailed. The Draft Board would have that information before it.

The prices of all things being fixed, the price fixing committee would make any necessary adjustments, as was done during the war. Under the system used in 1918 these prices were made public and adjusted every three months, so that any consumer or producer had his day in court when he considered prices unfair. Those who complained that during the war prices were too high had this ready recourse to hand.

In the meantime all the industries of the country would have been mobilized by the formation of committees representative of each industry as was done in the World War. Over them would be placed a government director or commodity chief. The various government departments would appoint committees representing their requirements, so that on one committee the resources of the nation would be represented and on the other the demands of the government. The government director would stand between to decide, in conjunction with the priority committee, to what department supplies should go.

Money would be controlled and directed like any other resource. "Taking the profit out of war" is not synonymous with "conscription of wealth," as it is sometimes regarded. The latter is a theoretical project, prohibited by our Constitution, contrary to the spirit of our social and political institutions, and impossible in practice. Taking the profit out of war is an orderly and scientific development of the economics and conduct of modern war, necessary to the effective mobilization of national resources and indispensable to equalizing the burdens of war among the armed and civilian population. Born of experience and proved by practice, it removes some of the most destructive concomitants of modern war—the confusion and waste incident to war time inflation.

This term "conscription of wealth," used by so many, has created a hope among those of socialistic tendencies, and a fear among those who, like me, believe in our system based upon personal initiative and reward, of a taking of money, without payment, for the use of State. Neither the hope nor the fear is justified by the recommendation herein contained or by our experience in the war. The use of money should be controlled and directed in a national emergency. A man should no more be permitted to use his money as he wishes than he should be permitted to use the production of his mine, mill or factory except through the general supervising agency. This was being done toward the end of the war.

"Light Wine And Beer"

The following editorial from the El Paso (Texas) Despatch, based on a tragic event in that city, reveals more clearly than pages of argument and explanation could do, the results that would follow the modification of the Volstead Act and the legalizing of "light wine and beer."

"A little wine and beer.

"And two officers are dead and two Negroes are doomed to die in the electric chair. The girl bride of the policeman is a widow—and all because of a little wine and beer.

"'We all got out and drank some wine,' says the confession of 'Snap' Robinson.

"'We got full on choc (beer),' says the confession of his partner in crime, S. D. Robinson.

"So after a little light wine and beer they drove the motor car forty and fifty miles an hour down the streets, each with a revolver in his hand. They murdered Policeman Isbell when he approached them. They fled and were hiding in a box car at DeQueen. Ark., when they murdered Special Officer Delman.

"Still the effects of a little light wine and beer.

"And now they will go to the electric chair and will be buried in quick lime in the penitentiary yard at Huntsville, and the anti prohibitionists might prepare a little headstone for each, saying,

"'A little light wine and beer.'"

SHALL HISTORY REPEAT ITSELF?

In the records of the past, the dark-brown beverage with its crown of froth has a big handicap.

The major slogan of the beerites today is "No saloons ever again," but let us not forget that before prohibition the United States Brewers' Association and its allied interests fought all who raised a voice against its pet enterprise, the corner beer saloon. It is recorded in the archives of the United States Senate. where all who wish may see, that this Association kept on a blacklist the names of those who opposed the saloon, to be placed in the hands of all brewers, saloonkeepers, hotel men and individuals and firms that made materials used by breweries, saloons and hotels; that in this fashion the Association boycotted John Wanamaker of sainted memory, because he said in his Sunday school that he was going to devote thebalance of his life to fighting the saloon. When a brewer wrote to Mr. Wanamaker that his family would never buy from him again unless he retreated from that position, Mr. Wanamaker replied, "My goods are for sale, but not my principles," The Blackstone Hotel in Chicago was black listed because it obeyed the law and closed its bar on Sunday in accordance with the law. Because H. J. Heinz, the great pickle dealer, was president of the Pennsylvania Sunday School Association, which adopted a temperance resolution that recognized the blighting effect of the saloon, the United States Brewers' Association notified the brewers and hotel keepers not to buy the products of Mr. Heinz's company. The Maryland Casulty Company was placed on this blacklist and brewers cancelled their insurance with it because its president acted as chairman of temperance meeting. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad was notified that brewers would not ship beer over its lines because after a wreck in which thirty persons were killed and seventy five injured, caused by a drunken employe, that company passed an order forbidding its employes to drink on or off duty.

In such high-handed fashion did the brewers of only a few years past endeavor to dominate the business world which did not approve of them and their product. Because of these and many other despicable acts, the business of the brewer was outlawed. It is inconceivable that the United States will permit their return to power and make it possible for them to again control politics in the interests of their beer-factories.

Sixty Thousand See Fores Fire Train

More than 60,000 people attended exhibits and lectures held in connection with the special "Forest Fire Fighting" special train, which has just completed its two months tour of the state under the joint auspices of the M. S. C. the U. S. Forestry Service, development and conservation departments and the railroads in the territory covered.

During the tour, the special made a total of 83 stops, according to a summary just prepared by L. F. Livingston, M. S. C. specialist in agricultural engineering who accompanied the train through out its entire trip. All counties of the Upper Peninsula and nearly the whole east side of the lower peninsula were covered during the tour.

Tremendous interest in forest fire control was shown all along the way, according to Livingston, big crowds fighting their way through adverse weather to "get" the information carried on the train. Many of the most important results of the tour will be felt in the future, it is said, through the indirect work which will be done by the hundreds who attended the train.

The U. S. Forest Service kept a man on the train for the whole swing, while specialists from the state conservation department and from different development bureau filled in for part time.

The railroads over which the fire special was run were as follows Michigan Central, D. and M., D. S. S. and A., Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, M. and St. P., M. M. and S. E., and the Soo Line This list of roads covers the itinerary of the train.

Seed Corn Survey Shows Test Needs

Seriousness of the seed corn situation in Michigan this spring, along with the need for careful testing of all planting stocks, is being pointed out again by crops specialists at the M. S. C., following a survey which has covered 19 counties of the state.

Failure to "field select" early enough and improper care of the seed stocks in storage are given as chief reasons for the poor condition of the seed by J. R. Duncan, crops specialist in charge of the survey. The fall of 1925 was, of course, a very bad one for handling seed corn, and called for extra care.

Professor Duncan, as a result of the survey, names three things which are "positively necessary" to insure seed corn of high germinating ability for planting. These are:

"Field select your seed corn in the fall as early as the condition of the corn will permit, preferably as soon as the early maturing ears have reached the hard dough and glazed stage of maturity.

"Place on hangers so that one ear does not touch another.

"Hang in a well ventilated place where the air circulation is free and unobstructed."

Testing of seed corn stock this spring for germination is being especially urged by the college, in order that the best from the none too good seed stock available may be selected.

Fred Nutten's Case Reversed

It will be remembered that some years ago Fred Nutten formerly of Moscow township was sheriff of Lenawee county, and in the discharge of duties was required to keep an account of actual expenses for arrest and care of criminals which he had under his supervision After his term of office was finished the Supervisors believed that some of the bills which Nutten had turned over to the county for these purposes were phony—in other words he made charges which the Supervisors did not believe were authorized. The overplus was between $600 and $700 and suit was begun in the courts at Adrian to recover this amount.

On account of political imbroglio Nutten claimed he could not receive fair treatment in Lenawee county courts and the case was taken to Monroe under the jurisdiction of Judge Root. This change of venue has probably cost the authorities more than the original bills. The jury however, decided against Nutten but through some technicality Judge Root set the verdict aside and it had to go to the Supreme Court which is the last resort. The decision was reversed. We clip the following from the Hudson Post:

"The case brought by Lenawee county over a year ago against Fred Nutten, former sheriff, to compel him to pay into the county treasury about $700 he is said to have retained from the collection of court costs without presenting his bills for audit by the board of supervisors, received a reverse decision in the Monroe District Court last week.

The matter has been one of political tangle, and when Henry Bourn became a candidate for prosecuting attorney in 1922 he pledged to bring action against Nutten on the above charge. Bourns was elected and he immediately filed a bill against the former sheriff A change of venue was secured and the case was heard by Judge Root in Monroe. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the county. Nutten's attorneys asked that the verdict be set aside and this was granted by the judge, the court holding that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The case went to the supreme court, the county appealing from the opinion of the Monroe circuit in setting aside the verdict of the jury and again the verdict is against Nutten.

Bourns says he will now proceed to take out a writ of execution of its judgment and that either Nutten or his bondsmen will be required to pay the amount of the judgment."

Seed Potato Buyers Victims Of Varietal Substitution

Potato growers who purchase seed potatoes do not always get the particular varieties they order. There is so much substitution of varieties by seed potato dealers that the growers are seeking the passage of control measures which will correct the evil. Substitutions, either careless or willful, are more apt to be made, says William Stuart, potato specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture, for the newer or less known varieties. Purchasers who order "fancy names" or "new and highly advertised" varieties are more likely to be victimized, he says, than those who stick to the widely known varieties.

Mr. Stuart ordered 139 different varieties last year from 61 different seedsmen. Many firms replied that they were "just out" of that particular variety. Of the 98 named varieties that were received, 25 percent proved to be varieties other than those specified in the order. In one instance, three varieties were ordered from a dealer advertising himself "reliable." Three different packages were received all of which proved to be the same variety, but not of any one of the three varieties ordered.

MRS. BASSETT ALWAYS TIRED

Now in Good Health by Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lansing, Michigan.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I needed it. When I first used it I was so bad I could hardly walk across the room without crying. I was tired all the time. I think my trouble was coming on me for six months before I realized it. I read of your wonderful medicine in the paper, and * * * my husband bought me a bottle, and after the first few doses I felt better, so kept on taking it until I was well and strong. I take it at times when I feel tired and it helps me. I will always have a good word for your medicine and tell anyone what good it has done me. I recommended it to my neighbor for her girl, who is sixteen years old, and it was just what she needed. She is feeling fine now, and goes to school every day."—Mrs. E. F. Bassett, 216 South Hayford Avenue, Lansing, Michigan.

Do not continue to feel all run-down and half sick when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is sold by druggists everywhere. It is a root and herb medicine and has been used by women for over fifty years.

A Nude Horse

Dorothy and Sally, age five and three, were visiting their grandparents in a southern Indiana town. One morning they had been out playing when they suddenly burst into the house very much excited and frightened. Being asked the reason for their hurried entrance, Dorothy gasped out: "Oh, there was a horse went running down the street and nobody was with it. And it didn't have a thing on, not even a strap—nothing but just its skin and its tail."

Most Fortunate

"How did Ethel manage to win that famous man?"

"Well, all the time he was courting her she suffered from sore gums and didn't feel like talking."

"He jump on heem from de tree!" Michel pointed to the broken branches of a neighboring spruce.

"That's what happened!" groaned Steele. "He waited for Pete to come up, and dropped on his back. Game old Pete! He gave a good account of himself before he went."

"We not tell de Injun dis," advised David.

"No, but they're stampeded by this time. We can't hope to hold any Portage lake hunters after last night. I guess we're licked."

So, burying his staunch friend in the snow, Steele turned back, bitter with defeat, for his hope of aiding the St. Onges had lessened as the November days wore on.

On their return Steele and the Indians found the camp of the Ojibways already deserted. On a blazed birch was the message:

"We are going up the valley. You have not driven away the Windigo and we have fear to remain."

They crossed the river to their camp, where David, from whom no calamity, however dire, could banish appetite, was speedily cooking breakfast. There, also, they found Little Jacques, shamed of face, for with the return of the others, his courage had revived.

Eating the warm meal which David had cooked, the tired and sleepy men turned into their blankets. In the afternoon David and Steele waked, to learn from Little Jacques that Michel had taken his rifle and ax and left the camp. As they sat by a huge fire, for the trees were snapping with the strengthening frost, like a shadow, the Iroquois slipped back across the river.

"Any sign of our friend?" asked Steele.

"No track on de ridge w'ere we set de beeg trap. Wind shift, eet grow cold."

The men ate in silence, and filled their pipes. For a time they sat and smoked, too dejected for conversation.

David had freshened the fire with a birch log and stood holding a blazing stick to his pipe, when he tilted his head. Steele watched the expression of the furrowed features in the firelight slowly shift from mild curiosity to sudden interest.

"You're not going to start us out again tonight, David?" said Steele.

"I hear somet'ing den," was the low reply. Steele rose and held his breath, ears straining.

Then from the ridge of the fox sets, hardly a half-mile distant, rose a scream.

"By gar! He's at de trap!" And David leaped for his shoes and rifle, and started for the ridge, followed by Steele and Michel.

As they crossed the river, the scream again lifted on the freezing air. The men had stopped to listen to locate the position of the beast, for the ridge was a long one, when, as the cry rose to its climax, it was cut short off—to leave the night again quiet.

They were nearing the first fox-set, and still the voice in the night held its silence. Could the beast be waiting to rush them from cover, like a wounded grizzly, wondered Steele.

Separated for safety, with cocked rifles, they advanced to the bear trap masked in the snow beside the bait.

"What you see, Michel?"

"He bin here, but miss de trap!" muttered the Indian, doubled over the snow. Steele and David moved up to look at the tracks. The trail led down the ridge toward the second trap. The hopes of the three friends rose. But why was the Thing so silent? Was he waiting to leap on them as he had sprung on the hound?

With rifles loose in the crook of the left arm, for the fingers of the right hand would freeze if exposed, and spread like skirmishers, they stalked the position of the hidden bear trap.

Through the blue shadows, Steele strove to locate the position of the fox-set beyond them. Then the warning arm of the Iroquois held him tense in his tracks. He slipped his right hand from the mitten to the grip of the Mannlicher. What had Michel seen?

As if carved from stone the Indian kneeled, rifle leveled, while Steele waited breathless for the explosion. Then to the surprise of the man whose right hand was fast stiffening on his gun grip, Michel suddenly rose to his feet. Joining Michel, where the view was unobstructed, Steele gasped in amazement. There in the snow, by the fox-set crouched a black hulk.

"Shoot, Michel!" he whispered, leveling his Mannlicher.

"No use," came the muttered answer. "Pete, he rest eesee—tonight."

"What! He's in the trap?"

"Ah—hah! He nevaire move; an' he face de odder way."

David joined them. "Dat Windigo froze stiff! Dis tam de trap stop hees howl queek!" But as they approached, three rifles covered the black shape in the snow.

Steele's heart beat high. Now that the crazed beast with the evil voice lay stiff in death, now that there was hope for Wailing River—and for her, the baffled scientist in Steele clamored for the key to the riddle. What breed of beast, mad or normal, could it be?

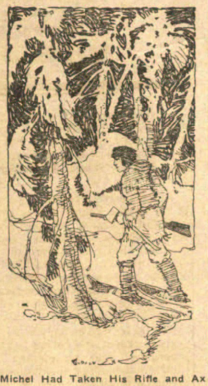
"By gar! Look, look w'at we hun' all dis tam'!" And the infuriated Iroquois slashed savagely at the carcass gripped by the jaws of steel, till the knife blade snapped in his hand. Then with a heave he turned over the hairy body with the trap, and Steele stared, dumbfounded, into the twisted features, horrible in the grimace of death, of—Pierre!

"Good G—d! Pierre from Ogoke—Laflamme!"

In amazement, David and Steele bent over the distorted face etched with the frenzied despair of the moment when the steel fangs snapped, crushing the bones, and he measured the minutes until the chill of the white death iced his blood. This Thing, stiff in its suit of bear-skin, with the huge feet lashed to the legs—this frozen masquerader, who, from Wailing River to the Feather lakes, from the Little Current to the Medicine hills, had filled the tipis with fear, had at last paid the price.

"So you de feller dat keel de man at Stoopin' riviere, an' poor ole Pete, ah—hah?" muttered the Ojibway, examining curiously the hood, framed from the scalp of a huge black bear, and the skinned-out paws, pieced into the great feet which had left the mysterious trail.

At length Steele found his voice. "To think of all that wailing and squalling being done by an Indian! What vocal chords! He was a marvel!



Michel Had Taken His Rifle and Ax and Left the Camp.

Must have been trained for it by Laflamme! Poor old Pete! We've squared it for you. How did he kill him, Michel?"

"Shoot heem from de tree, den cut heem wid de knife!"

"How he run on de snow wid dem feet beat me," wondered David.

'He use snowshoe 'til he wan' to make Windigo track. He lose de shoe w'en Pete get hees trail."

Then the stored hate of weeks for the master mind behind this broken tool at their feet—the arch plotter, who, with such subtlety had planned to turn the valley of the lower Wailing into "forbidden country" which no hunter dared enter—a land under a taboo, spirit-ridden, shunned; was loosed in Steele.

"That crook at Ogoke shall pay for all this—pay with his skin, with every cent he owns," he stormed. "Give me your hands, you two!"

Slipping off their mitts the three friends gripped over their victim.

"We swear, here and now, that we will run Laflamme and his crowd out of this country, if we stay on the snow until spring. Promise!"

"No!" objected David, withdrawing his fist. "He ees for me—de odders for you!"

"Right! He belongs to David—the police can't have him!"

And the three half-frozen men left the thing in the trap and snow-shoed back to their camp where they found Little Jacques huddled by the fire bemoaning the fate of his misguided friends, who so rashly had followed the voice of the Windigo to their doom.

"What's the matter Jacques? Think you see ghosts?" asked Steele of the frightened Cree.

"You—you not eat up?" he asked. "You nevaire shoot de gun. I had fear de Windigo get you."

"No, we got him—in the bear trap. In the morning I want you to go up and see him so you can tell the people at Wailing River."

"No, no! I weel not look at heem!" protested the little half-breed, his face picturing the horror aroused by Steele's suggestion.

"The Windigo, Jacques, we found to be an old friend of yours, sent by Laflamme to frighten the Indians—Pierre, who was at the post in September. You must have a look at him for yourself before you take the news to St. Onge. In the morning we'll send for all the people in the district to come and see him."

"Pierre, from Ogoke, he mak' all dis troubl'?"

"Yes. He won't scare any more hunters in this valley."

CHAPTER XV

In the morning Steele with difficulty persuaded fearful Little Jacques to accompany him to the bear trap on the ridge. The Cree, with much murmuring and many misgivings, cast a hurried look at the twisted features of the thing in the trap and turning, led Steele a mad pace back to camp. Then Jacques started with his dog-team for Wailing River with the news of the victory.

Before dawn, Michael and David had left for the scattered camps at the head of the lake to dispatch dog runners east, south and west with the word that the dreaded Windigo lay frozen in a bear trap at Portage lake for the eyes of all who would journey there to see.

But what, after all, did this victory—this thwarting of Laflamme's scheme to terrorize and depopulate the valley—mean to him, Steele asked himself as he sat beside his fire of birch logs that late November morning. There was no doubt that the Indians once they looked at the body of Pierre and learned that the Ogoke trader was at the bottom of it all—had loosed in their country a madman with orders, not only to drive them from their hereditary hunting grounds but to kill—would be keen for vengeance. There would be no lack of volunteers among the trappers for a campaign against the free-trader. But there would be no help from the government until spring, and the situation at Wailing River demanded immediate action. No, there was nothing to do but pull Laflamme's teeth at once, and notify the government later.

But then the defeat of Laflamme did not mean the salvation of the post—far from it. Lascelles could close the post, even in the face of a profitable future, for the loss of the fur canoe had put the place badly in debt to the company. So, with Laflamme eliminated, Denise St. Onge seemed no nearer. Whether he kept the post in operation or not, the inspector would never release her from her promise. The only solution was her father's breaking with Revillon Freres—but would he do it? Would she allow him to, knowing the hopeless alternative he would face?

Then the wind-burned features of the man who sat thinking by the fire contracted with pain as he realized the presumption, the futility, so far as he was concerned, of his solicitude for the future of those at Wailing River. Already she had thrust him from her. She had condemned him without hearing. In the end, if they won out for St. Onge, and, owing to what had been told the Revillon people at Montreal, Lascelles dared not close the post, he, Steele, would have her gratitude—her gratitude! when once she had come to him with her heart in her eyes—had vibrated like the string of a violin to his touch, had turned instinctively to him in her despair!

In two days Michel and David returned with hunters from the head of the lake keen for a look at the body of the masquerader who had left a trail of terror throughout the valley of the Wailing. And when they saw the thing which had been sent by Laflamme to drive them from their trap-lines to new and strange hunting country in the upper valley where their trade would go to Ogoke, there was a clamor for vengeance. Later when dog teams, from the Little Current to the Medicine hills, had answered the call of runners from Portage lake, Michael marshaled the Ojibways at the trap on the ridge and addressed them dramatically in their native tongue.

Tides in Inland Seas

There are tides in both the Mediterranean sea and the Gulf of Mexico. In the Mediterranean they are so slight as to be almost imperceptible; in the Gulf of Mexico they run from two and a half to four feet. A delta is an alluvial plain formed by a deposit of sand and mud carried down a river. As the stream enters quieter waters the deposit falls to the bottom and increases in area and height until it reaches the surface and is raised by floods and tides above the high-water mark. The delta of the Ganges and the Brahmaputra has an area of 50,000 square miles and that of the Nile is 200 miles wide and 100 miles long. The Mississippi delta, which encroaches at a rate of 260 feet a year, has an area of 12,300 square miles. Great deltas are only found in comparatively tideless seas, because the deposits would not otherwise have a chance of accumulating.

Stars at Distances That Stagger Mind

There are stars so remote that if the news of the victory of Wellington at Waterloo had been flashed to them in 1815 on the celestial telegraph system it would not have reached them yet, even if the message had sped at the rate of 180,000 miles a second, and had been traveling all the time; that if, when William the Conqueror landed in England in 1066, the news of his conquest had been dispatched to them, and if the signal flew over the wire at a pace which would carry it seven times around the earth in a second of time, the news would not have reached them yet.

Even if the glad tidings of that first Christmas in Bethlehem, nineteen centuries ago, had thus been disseminated through the universe, there are yet stars of which astronomers could tell us, plunged into space in depths so appalling that even the years which have elapsed since would not have been long enough for the news to reach them, though it traveled 180,000 miles every second!—Montreal Family Herald.

Metal railway sleepers have to be used in many parts of India. Wooden sleepers would be eaten by insects.

POULTRY

DIFFERENT CAUSES FOR POOR HATCHES

Many small factors in the management of the flock can often affect the results which are attained in hatching eggs. With the present development of the incubators the expert operator is usually able to secure good results if the original hatching quality of the eggs is satisfactory. In the large hatcheries it is often observed that different trays of eggs run side by side will show a marked difference in the number of chicks hatched. The reason for this difference lies in the original eggs.

Mature breeding stock. The usual age agreed upon is nine months. Many prefer females in their second year.

Plenty of male birds. Many supply one cockerel to ten hens, but the majority agree that one cockerel to fifteen hens is sufficient with the light breeds.

Remove diseased birds from the flock.

Birds which are otherwise confined should be given an outside runway when it is possible to do so without endangering the health of the birds. Direct sunlight should strike the birds.

Birds should be comfortably housed. Floors should be covered with a litter of straw and changed whenever it shows any indication of dampness, mustiness or filth.

Artificial light should not be used to stimulate laying for 60 days previous to date of saving first eggs for hatching.

A balanced ration of approximately equal portions of scratch feed and mash should be furnished.

The hens should be supplied with some type of green feed such as mangels or sprouted oats as well as hoppers filled with oyster shell and grit.

Regularity and good care for a month or six weeks prior to saving of eggs as well as during the period of saving of eggs for hatching, combined with the above essentials, should produce eggs which will hatch a high per cent of live chicks.

Turkeys With Diarrhea

Diarrhea is one of the prominent symptoms of blackhead in turkeys, though it may also occur from other causes. It is a pretty safe guess that blackhead is present when diarrhea appears and the turkeys begin to drop dead, one by one, as the disease progresses. No remedy of any considerable value has yet been found for this trouble. Each turkey may be given a dose of castor oil, one to two teaspoonfuls, when any looseness of the bowels appear. This will clear out any irritating matter.

Improvement of Flock

One of the most economical methods of improvement of the poultry flock is by the purchase of a few settings of hatching eggs. From these may be raised a few females and enough breeding males to head the flock during the succeeding year. Care should be taken to make sure that the stock from which one is purchasing eggs is superior to his own.

Nests Easily Cleaned

Nests for laying hens can be easily cleaned if they are built in sections, or tiers, of three or more nests, without bottoms, and set on shelves. When the nests are pulled from the shelf all the straw and dirt will fall to the floor.

Poultry Notes

Teach birds to roost early—prevents crowding.

* * *

* * *

* * *

Have brooder house ready before the chicks arrive.

* * *

Segregate cockerels from pullets as soon as possible. Keep forcing pullets along with mash, even when on range.

* * *

Look out for overheated brooders and brooder house fires. Make an inspection of all apparatus regularly and take no chances.

* * *

Do you know why big dressed chickens will not sell readily? The city man is a frugal buyer—he has to be—and chicken soon runs up the price when heavy.

* * *

If disease is in your flock, there is a cause. Hunt for it; and burn or bury all dead chicks without a second's delay.

* * *

If you have "a good old mother hen for chickens" don't kill or sell her. Even if she only lays five eggs a year, she earns her feed in brooding.

* * *

To throw away the addled eggs at nesting or hatching time is to teach some animal bad habits, or pollute the air. Bury them deep or burn them at once.

* * *

If you knew how extremely valuable hen manure is, you wouldn't waste a crumb of it. Try it on a piece of sod, and see.

* * *

Keep the young chicks out of the water basins. Use an inverted tumbler or dish in a pan or else buy a little handy fountain.

* * *

Give the young chicks a chance to dry off and get their "sea legs" before putting them into the brooder, and be careful not to chill them while making the transfer

Hillsdale City is to finance a thrifty tool factory which comes from Detroit to locate on 14 acres of land adjoining the city limits at Beck Road. A large brick factory building will be erected and connections made with the city water and sewer systems. In order to do this it will be necessary to place a special tax assessment on the city to meet the expense which will be considerable. In addition the city will furnish free water service and give other privileges. As near as can be learned the new enterprise will employ a few hundred skilled workers and bring to Hillsdale a large aggregation of highly paid machinists.

About twenty five young people of the Baptist Young Peoples' Union of Hillsdale visited at the North Adams Methodist church Sunday evening. They had charge of the young peoples' meeting at six o'clock, attended the preaching service, and were afterward entertained for supper by the Epworth League at the parsonage.

Rev. E. R. Fulkerson, for twenty years president of a college in Tokio Japan, and who represented the United States under appointment of President Roosevelt in the negotiations following the Russo-Japanese War, spoke at the Methodist church Monday evening. His coming was announced too late to appear in print, or the attendance would probably have been larger. As it was, he addressed the high school in the afternoon and about 60 interested listeners at the church.

Farmers Day, the annual summer gathering at the M. S. C. will be held on Friday, July 30, this year, accerding to announcement just made at the college. Except for the addition of new features, the program for the day will be quite similar to that of former years It will include inspection of the college experimental plots and barns, a big open air meeting with prominent national figures on the speaking program, and a schedule of picnic features. More than 8,000 farmers and their families gathered at M. S. C. for Farmers Day last year.

Lula Vickers (nee Bessie Travis) formerly of Hillsdale, was granted a divorce and had her matrimonial bonds rudely unsoldered by the Court's blow torch on Tuesday. The Judge granted her a decree from Walter Vickers of Jonesville on the grounds of cruelty and general principles. She said Walter was naughty and talked things he shouldn't. He called Bessie insidnous and putrid names. It has taken them 23 years to discover the real crux of the situation, as they have three grown-up children. The Judge also blow torched another couple and cut down another chap's alimony from $9.00 to $6.00 per week which is probably even now too severe for the unfortunate man's pocketbook. It is claimed that the present amount of alimony assessed in Hillsdale county has dumbfounded the recording angel and the last seen of Cupid the little rascal was making sevenleen-foot jumps toward Coldwater, trying to get out of the county.

A very interesting and instructive meeting was held in East Lansing last week at which were the County campaign managers and State sponsors of the new F. B. campaign. Wednesday was the big day. Bennett of General Organization Dept. of Chicago and Rev. Frank Kingdon of Central M. E. church of Lansing gave the addresses.

It was a very inspiring meeting emphasizing the need of cooperation and organization among the farmers. Read your Farm Bureau News.

"We Serve Michigan"

What Co-operation Is Accomplishing

THE American shipping public since the war period has come to realize a certain responsibility devolving upon it beyond the mere payment of the authorized charges for the transportation service performed.

There is, for instance, the requirement of the prompt loading and unloading of the railroad equipment on the part of consignors and consignees, respectively.

There is the obligation on the shipper of early advice of car requirements to enable the railroads to "mobilize" equipment.

THESE two requirements enter largely and eventually into the cost of steam railroad transportation and they are dependent upon the good-will directly manifested by the shippers and altogether beyond the control of the railroads.

Recognition of these factors has brought about the organization of the Shippers Regional Advisory Boards and enables the country to get more service from the equipment of the American railroads.

THIS is entirely voluntary service on the part of the shippers and is a unique page in the history of business. It has also been a profitable expedient, a lesson in co-operation gained from the world war, a phase in the onward march of the times, which Judge E. H. Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, recently described as the application of the Golden Rule in business, a condition that was inconceivable twenty-five years ago.

It is a manifestation of a quiet but certain revolution in American business thought which is gradually progressing towards the finest ideals, and incidentally tending to the greater well-being of our people and making for greater material returns.

THE Michigan Railroad Association is keeping step with the shippers and heartily seconding those ideals of an enlightened business opinion and appreciates that this policy is as important to the stabilizing of business as are the operations of the Federal Reserve Bank System in its particular branch of public economy. In fact, it is the identical application of that principle to transportation. Michigan industry has much to gain through the policy of the Shippers' Regional Advisory Boards.

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

National Crime Commission Goes Into Action Against Country's Lawbreakers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WITH encouraging words from President Coolidge, the National Crime commission got into action last week in Washington, determined to find some way to check crimes of violence in the United States. The members held secret committee meetings and planned a nation-wide drive, issuing an appeal for the organization of crime commissions in each state. The people are asked to arouse and enlist the aid of these four agencies:

Public opinion, by keeping the need to combat crime before the eyes of dutiful citizens.

Federal authority, by asking such approval and co-operation within the scope of federal influence and power.

The governors of the states, by willingness to take up with them the plans for state crime commissions.

Organizations of national scope, such as those devoted to patriotism, labor, commerce, and organizations of women citizens, by asking their aid in applying their influence within the states upon public opinion and public authority.

One immediate result was the obtaining of a pledge from the Remington Arms company that it would support legislation for a uniform law in the several states to "control the sale, ownership, possession and use" of pistols and revolvers.

Frank O. Lowden of Illinois called the attention of the commission to the tremendous power of organized crime, declaring this to be a new problem confronting civilization.

District Attorney Banton of New York deprecated "sob stuff" and urged the vast importance of speedy justice. "A crime not tried within six months of its commission," said he, "loses over 50 per cent of its triable value. Today, as a result of a clearing of the dockets by more courts and more judges, I can try any man in New York county within three weeks of his plea. Two thousand and ninety-eight cases have been disposed of since January 1, with the result that New York is no longer popular with criminals. You can do that anywhere in the United States. We did it by just plugging away at the situation, by getting more judges, and by having a sufficient number of grand juries. I begged the newspapers of New York to give as much space to the efforts to suppress crime as they did to crime committed. They replied that they would print it. They did. The result of this publicity was equal to 2,000 extra policemen and ten extra judges."

This National Crime commission, it may be remembered, has for members some of the country's most eminent men and women, including former Ambassador Richard Washburn Child, Newton D. Baker, Herbert S. Hadley, Mrs. Richard Derby (daughter of Colonel Roosevelt), Gen. James A. Drain, Trubee F. Davison, Charles E. Hughes, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Senator Charles S. Deneen, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Charles S. Whitman, Governor Winant of New Hampshire, and Judge Marcus Kavanagh and Henry Barrett Chamberlin of Chicago. The commission has been investigating for nine months and has concluded there is no panacea for crime, but that application of remedies rests with individual states and individual citizens. Administration of justice, it finds, is the most pressing question.

WHILE Mayor Dever of Chicago and District Attorney Olson were still quarreling about the responsibility for crime conditions in and about the city, the criminals demonstrated their contempt for the law and its officers by assassinating an active assistant state's attorney and two other men with whom he was sitting in an automobile, one being a member of a liquor gang. The murderers used a Thompson machine gun, a new weapon that seems likely to supplant the sawed-off shotgun. As has been the case each time the gangsters have murdered a policeman in Chicago, the killing created a great furor and brought forth official assertions that the criminals would be caught and hanged and the city cleaned of all their ilk. But that job needs something more. Everyone conversant with the facts knows well that at the root of crime conditions in Chicago lie these things:

Corrupt politics.

Difficulty in getting convictions of criminals, due to the timidity and dishonesty of juries and to the hesitancy of judges who fear reversals by an appellate court that pays too much attention to technicalities and petty legal quibbles.

The ease with which the thugs, when convicted, get out of prison by the aid of a complaisant board of pardons and paroles.

Of course the enemies of the Volstead act blame it for much of the lawlessness. That view is taken by the Chicago city council in a memorandum submitted by it to the senate last week, asking for modification of the prohibition laws to permit the sale of beer and wines.

WITH only four votes in the negative, the house passed the treasury reorganization bill written by General Andrews, federal prohibition enforcement chief. It raises the prohibition unit and the customs service to the status of bureaus headed by commissioners appointed by the secretary of the treasury. These bureaus, with the coast guard, would be grouped under the direction of a single assistant secretary charged with supervision of prohibition enforcement. The measure also carries an amendment to place all except the highest prohibition officials under civil service regulations.

FRANCE made a new offer for the funding of her debt to the United States Thursday which was entirely satisfactory to the American debt commission and to President Coolidge. It was promptly signed by Secretary Mellon and Ambassador Berenger. How soon it will be ratified by the American and French senates is problematical.

The agreement provides for a payment over sixty-two years of a grand total of $6,847,674,104, beginning with annual payments of $30,000,000 during each of the first two years and running up to a maximum beginning with the seventeenth year of $125,000,000. This is an increase of $627,000,000 over the total payments offered in the Caillaux negotiations last September. The interest over the sixty-two year period amounts to an average of slightly more than 1⅝ per cent.

DEBT funding arrangements with Belgium, Latvia, Rumania, Esthonia and Czechoslovakia all were ratified by the senate, and the President signed the Italian debt-funding bill passed the previous week.

From London comes a story that leading international bankers are considering a colossal plan for "the liquidation in one great ensemble of the problems of German reparations and the war debt—in other words, the whole question of the intergovernmental indebtedness left to the world as one of the aftermaths of the World war." The plan is somewhat hazy but it is based on the idea that the European debts to the United States, figured according to the settlements being made, would be not far from $3,750,000,000; that the securities to be issued by the German railroads under the Dawes plan for about that amount could be marketed for more than $3,000,000,000 if the various nations would make these bonds free of taxes, and that the yield could be turned over to the allies entitled to reparations and paid by them to the United States in settlement of all debts. Thus all reparations arrangements and debt-funding agreements would be wiped out.

GERMANY and Russia have signed a treaty of amity and neutrality that will have a far-reaching effect on European affairs. The two nations pledge mutual neutrality, both military and economic, should a third power declare war on either, actuated by motives of unprovoked aggression. Germany promises to participate in no action against Russia directed by the League of Nations if the German representative in the league decides there are no proper grounds for Germany's participation. All disputes between the two nations arising from the present treaty, the Locarno accords and Germany's entry into the league are to be submitted to a nonpartisan court of arbitration. This treaty was filed with the secretariat of the league.

According to London dispatches, an early result of the German-Russian pact will be a tripartite treaty between Russia, Germany and Lithuania. Among its objects will be the wiping out of the narrow corridor between Lithuania and Russia now held by Poland, and also the wiping out of the Danzig corridor by which Poland cuts Germany in two. It is understood, also, that Lithuania would restore the port of Memel to Germany, in return for which the Germans would build for Lithuania a new port on the Baltic. These changes would give the tripartite alliance a clear sweep from the North sea to the Pacific, and the northern Baltic states, which are hostile to Soviet Russia, would be isolated.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE is worried by a prospective deficit of $21,000,000 in 1927, and has again warned the Republican leaders in congress that the legislative program must be kept within budget limits. He is especially opposed to legislation carrying continuing appropriations for the future. He hinted that he might veto the Spanish war veterans' pension bill but it was believed he would not go to this length.

FIGURES just made public by the internal revenue bureau show that income tax collections for March were $504,141,356, or $65,412,739 more than for March last year. New York showed the largest collection and Florida the greatest proportionate increase. Returns lower than last year were made by Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Alabama, Georgia, New Mexico, Oregon and Hawaii.

THE League of Nations proposes to call a conference to work out plans to cure the economic ills of the world, and for the purpose of preparing for this meeting 37 leading economists and labor leaders met last week in Geneva. Among them are three Americans, A. Gilbert of Boston, David Houston and Allyn Young of Harvard. During the discussions Alberto De Stefani, the principal Italian delegate, raised the question of immigration restriction and called such restriction a menace to world peace. "I repeat," the Italian said, "the declaration I made in London when the Dawes plan was adopted. That is, that the most essential condition for the new era of peace is complete liberty of movement of peoples and products."

The Japanese delegate, Sugimura, touched on racial equality, declaring it to be imperative that there should be no discrimination by any country against the ships or products or foreigners.

DR. RODRIGO OCTAVIO of Brazil and Fernando G. Roa of Mexico, members of the Mexico-American special claims commission, announced that they had decided against the United States in the Santa Ysabel case involving the massacre of American mining engineers by Villa's band in 1916. Judge E. B. Perry, the American member, dissented, denying this constituted a legal decision and declaring it would not be binding on the United States. Perry insinuated that the case had been prearranged behind his back, and the Mexicans were enraged by this.

FORECLOSURE and sale of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad was ordered by Federal Judge Wilkerson in Chicago. The sale will take place in Butte, Mont., the date and upset price to be announced later. The wording of the decree gives all sides a chance to be heard in the bidding and the reorganization. The railroad is a $750,000,000 corporation.

RIZA KHAN, one time private soldier, was formally crowned as Shah Pehlevi of Persia—or rather he crowned himself—amid scenes of oriental pomp and splendor. Those who know him believe he will bring Persia up to date and will establish a good government. He comes of aristocratic stock and has an excellent education.

Chief Has Good Word for Highway Builders

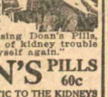
Washington. — Although investigations made by the bureau of public roads indicate the average highway contractor does not operate above 50 per cent efficiency, Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau, declared the highway builders are no less efficient than contractors on railroad work and other operations.

One hundred per cent efficiency, according to Mr. MacDonald, is not obtainable on work of this character, detailed observations indicating from 85 to 90 per cent to be the best practicable performance.

The difference between the maximum obtainable efficiency and the average performance results largely from numerous small-time losses, the importance of which is not sufficiently appreciation by the foremen and superintendents who direct the labor employed on large construction projects.

By stop-watch studies of operations on actual highway projects the bureau is seeking to discover the commontime losses and bring them to the attention of contractors generally. In this way it hopes to develop a higher average level of efficiency in the conduct of the country's billion dollar program of road construction and maintenance.

The bureau's studies have been made with the intention of showing the responsible contractors how costs may be reduced, and of assisting them in that way to meet the competition of those who have nothing to lose.



Lame, Tired, Achy?

Are you tired, lame, achy—worried with backache? Do you suffer sharp pains, headaches, dizziness and disturbing bladder irregularities? Perhaps your kidneys need attention. When the kidneys fail to properly filter the blood, body impurities accumulate and cause poisoning of the whole system. Such a condition may lead to serious sickness. Don't neglect it! If you suspect your kidneys, why not give Doan's Pills a trial? Doan's have been used successfully over thirty-five years—are recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

Solomon Huntly, N. Jefferson St., Ithaca, Mich., says: "I had a dull, steady ache in my back and when I bent over the pains grew worse and I found it hard to keep up with my work. The kidney secretions passed frequently. After using Doan's Pills, I was entirely rid of kidney trouble and I felt like myself again."

Grand Rapids—Richard Tandler, 27 years old, former vaudeville performer, is recovering from poisoning said to have been caused by wearing shoes which had been dyed. A few hours after he had put on the shoes he became seriously ill and was taken to St. Mary's hospital.

Alma—An increase of $44,058.44 is shown in the proposed city budget submitted by City Manager Reynolds to the commission. The total of the proposed budget for the coming year is $131,416.94. Increases are shown in nearly every fund, being needed to care for expansions as a result of securing a large new industry and the addition of some hundreds of families to the city.

Mt. Clemens—The Detroit conference of the Women's Foreign Missionary society met in the local Methodist church April 29 and 30 with 300 delegates from the district in attendance. The district includes the eastern half of Michigan and the entire upper peninsula. Missionaries from India, China and the Philippine Islands recounted experiences of the work in these countries.

Cadillac—State trunk line M-13 has been adopted by the Michigan board of governors of the James Whitcomb Riley Memorial highway as its route from the Indiana line to Mackinaw. The vote was 8 to 3, the opposing votes being cast by delegates from Traverse City, Elk Rapids and Charlevoix who withdrew after the ballot was announced. They sought to have the highway diverted through their cities.

Alma—Announcement has been made by F. Roy Phillips, for the past six years superintendent of public schools at Croswell, that he has accepted the position as superintendent of schools in this city, succeeding A. C. Lutchman, who has been connected with the Alma schools for 12 years. Prior to going to Croswell Phillips was principal and then superintendent of schools at Marlette for five years.

Pontiac—More than 100 citizens of Royal Oak Township have filed petitions asking to have the matter of the incorporation of the village of Hazel Park submitted to the voters for their approval at the September primary election. They would incorporate four square miles of the township west of Ferndale into a village which locality is said to now boast 12,000 residents. The petitions will be brought to the attention of the supervisors in June.

Pontiac—Smoking in Pontiac city schools is taboo. Even when the parent-teachers' associations hold evening gatherings in the future the men will not be permitted to smoke. The board of education has set its foot down hard on the practice, declaring it is not only a bad example to set to the children, but it leaves the rooms smelly and they cannot be aired out even the next day. All the local parent-teacher's associations are to be notified of the new ruling

Lansing—A series of meetings to perfect plans for arousing interest and assuring active co-operation of Republican women in the coming campaign, have been planned by the executive committee of the Republican Women's Federation. The first meeting will be held in Detroit some time in July. Mrs. Cora Reynolds Anderson, of L'Anse, the only woman member of the State Legislature, announces that she is a candidate for re-election. She urges other women to seek public office.

Lansing—Reports are current in political circles that the banquet which was to have been held April 29 by the Ingham County Women's Republican club had been selected as the scene of Lieutenant-Governor Welsh's formal announcement as a candidate for re-election. This has been denied by Mr. Welsh. Mrs. Hull, president of the club, stated that there was no political significance to the affair. Sickness and spring housecleaning were the chief reasons for the postponement.

Lansing—That the railroads of the state are not opposed to trucks and busses, when there is a certain amount of co-ordination, was the statement made here by Colonel Roy C. Vandercook, manager of the Michigan Railroads association in his address to members of the Merchants' bureau. "Changed conditions have made the busses and trucks a necessary part of present day transportation," said Colonel Vandercook, "and the railroads are willing to have this competition on a business basis.

Grand Rapids—Red Cross work was the general topic before the Michigan State Nurse's association and the Michigan League of Nursing at their joint meetings here. Miss Elba L. Morse, chairman of the public health section, allied with the Red Cross in its work against disease, stressed the activities of that organization during peace time. Miss Morse said that the Red Cross, now engaged in public health service, finds its most difficult problems in the rural districts where there are few if any nurses.

Flint—Frank Wade, president of the Michigan Federation of Labor, has announced himself as a candidate for the Republican nomination for State Representative from the newly created Flint district at the primary election Sept. 14. Wade announced his platform as "conservation of the human being as well as of our forests, fish and game life" and declares himself in favor of old age compensation "to care for worthy old people who through misfortune or inability to provide for themselves in old age are now kept by the county

A Couple Of Rakes Meet

Sunday morning April 18th at Moscow on the Pike was the scene of a auto smash which came near taking life. Wes Adams and Carl Kunkle were rumbling along in their 'lil old Hudson Coach toward the east and when almost in front of the Linus McCowan farm in Moscow village a rapidly driven Cadillac came into view from the opposite direction. Adams and Kunkle had just passed a Ford car and the appearance of the Cadillac was so sudden they scarcely had time to swerve. The driver of the Cadillac was exceeding the speed limit by a large majority, going at fifty or sixty miles per hour, and when he applied his four-wheel brakes the impact threw his car head-on into the Hudson coach. The coach was demolished and the new Cadillac suffered internal injuries. Sheriff Midgley was at once on the scene where he arrested the Cadillac driver who said he was a tester and was trying out the hill speed of his rig. He will be represented by counsel furnished by the Cadillac company. At the hearing Monday morning this bird pleaded guilty to speeding and recklessness Of course the company will pay his fine and that will end it, but the case is certainly typical of the times. Adams and Kunkle may as well buy a new car as it will require at least $800 to repair the same. A real nifty judge on the case would win laurels by granting Adams and Kunkle a new Cadillac which the company ought to be obliged to furnish in settlement of the case.

Here's A Good Joke

In what is known as "extension work" for the United States department of agriculture, the most experienced and highest trained experts are placed in charge of the "boys and girls club work." The main idea of this type of educational effort is to train these youngsters so that they will become interested in farm work, learn to love the land and develop a desire to remain thereon as a life vocation. Special pains is often taken by State Fair managements to bring club winners from all over Michigan and give them a week of inspecting, guided by experienced leaders who will see that the lads and lasses receive first hand information. The new state fair board proposes to take a crack at this for the boys and girls of Michigan. However, instead of turning the matter over to either state or federal experts, as has been the custom in the past, a Detroit attorney is going to be chief of this Fair department. Geo. A. Kelley, law partner of Governor Groesbeck has been officially designated as head of the "Boys and Girls Club Exhibit" and he will explain to the visitors a lot of things.

When the state took over the State Fair activities last fall the organization treasury was well filled, in fact contained a cash balance of about $200,000. This is to be blown in at once, instead of being held as an emergency reserve. Howard Taylor, former printer, now secretary-manager of the fair, is designing an up-to-date pig-pen, also a cow shed, which it is calculated will eat up this surplus.

Governor Groesbeck himself is out begging the automobile manufacturers of Michigan to advance $1,000,000 for a permanent exhibit building for their wares, same to be open the year round. So far the project has not met with much encouragement, but the governor will give it another try when he gets time and patience. The idea is for these men of business to loan or advance the money, same to be repaid at some indefinite time in the future without interest.

The fair will be open only one week this year, instead of ten days as formerly; also will stay closed on Sunday. formerly a big money earner. Horse racing will be revived, if any horses can be found in Michigan that can run, trot or pace.—Rouge Herald.

Camping

We bespeak your co-operation in prevention of forest fires and water pollution, and make the following suggestion for your assistance:

1. Matches—Be sure your match is out. Break it in two before you throw it away.

Tobacco—Be certain that pipe ashes and cigar or cigarette stubs are dead before throwing them away. Never throw them into brush leaves or needles.

Making camp—Before building a fire scrape all inflamable material from a spot five feet in diameter. Dig a hole in the center and in it build your camp fire. Keep it small. Never build a fire against trees, logs, or near brush.

Refuse—Burn or bury all garbage, papers, tin cans, old clothes and other refuse.

How to put out a camp fire—Stir the coals while drowning with water. Turn small sticks and drench both sides, wet ground around the fire. If water cannot be had. stir in dirt instead and tread down until packed tight over and around the fire. Be sure the last spark is dead.

New Plating For Automobiles

From Detroit factories comes the news that a new method of plating has been discovered for nickel parts of machines which is going to be a winner. The great objection to electro plating heretofore has been its extreme short life and liability to rust if allowed to become damp and then neglected. The radiator shells and other steel parts are received at the works and are polished on a common buffer wheel to make them smooth. They are then copper plated which requires 20 minutes. From the copper bath they go to hot water wash, after which they are nickel plated requiring forty minutes. The shells are then polished as usual. After this comes the Chromium plate which requires only 2 minutes. A relative test of this work shows that while the ordinary nickel plate showed rust spots at the end of 18 to 20 hours. Chromium plated parts, however show no material breaking down after 40 hours and evidence of rust on many shells was small after 80 to 100 hours when tested with the salt blast.

It is estimated that 80 hours under this test is equivalent to approximately 10 years under ordinary climatic conditions, so that the chromium plated exterior parts of an automobile will outwear the car itself.

While chromium plating on iron and steel parts involves a plating in addition of nickel, the cost is relatively the same because of the elimination of one buffing operation in the process. In nickel plating it was necessary to buff the part after the copper bath. This involved considerable manual work. In the new process, the elimination of the labor cost of this one buffing operation more than takes care of the added cost of the chromium plate. No change in the price of the car to the buyer will result from the new process, according to officials of the corporation.

A chromium salt, in the form of chromic acid, is used because it has been found cheaper than buying the metal itself. The acid is dumped directly into the tank and the solution is maintained by merely the addition of more acid.

It has been found that a set temperature gives the best plating results and a dial type thermometer mounted on the chromium tank and visible at all times to the operator, is used to maintain a steady temperature.

Camp Custer Calls For Candidates

This method of training young men for army service is not so bad after all in view of the fact that military training does no one any harm and a vast number of young men are greatly helped by the discipline and the style of military bearing. While it is not definitely settled there shall be no more wars yet we believe the day is dawning with the League of Nations when it will be impossible for any nation of any importance to go to war.

But the necessity for soldiers will never cease. The Philippines Guam and Hawaii appeal to the youth as nothing else can, and as long as we possess these Islands of the sea, so long will we police them with our troops, therefore the novelty of visiting foreign lands at Government expense is something which wont wear off. Any young man between the ages of 17 and 24 years who will register his name with us can obtain application blanks for entering Camp Custer this summer, which does more to make men of our boys than all the home training in the world. Bear in mind parents, we are not advising your son to join the Regulars or the U. S. Navy, but we are simply suggesting to those who have the wanderlust that will not be stilled, no better use of their disposition could be made.

April Is Month Of Fatal Anniversaries, Too Many

April—Bad Time for Starting Trouble.

April is the most fateful month in American history as five of our six major wars began then, and the same month brought to a close the civil war and the assassination of President Lincoln.

Every American schoolboy, of course, is familiar with the story of April 19, 1775 and knows how Paul Revere rode along the historic highway and warned the patriots that the British were coming at daybreak under General Gage to destroy the supplies which were concealed near Concord bridge.

It was at Lexington, on the public square, in the early morning, that the first blood of the red coats scattered the handful of minute men. The story at Concord was different however. There the British met the first resistance of the war and were soon in retreat, a retreat which became a rout before the soldiers got back to Boston. So it was April 19, 1775 which really marked the beginning of the history of the United Stetes as a nation.

This April of 1926 is the sixty first anniversary of the ending of the civil war by the surrender of Lee and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theatre at Washington.

It was on April 9 that Lee surrendered to Grant at Appamatox, and this date lacked three days of being four years from the date when the Civil War began.

President Lincoln was assassinated on the fourteenth day of the same month and grief succeeded the rejoicing that had come with the end of the war.

Since that date April has brought us two more wars, the Spanish-American struggle which commenced April 19, 1898, and our war with Germany which began April 2, 1917.

These are some of the high points presented by Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, in an interview on highway development.

"The equipment of this continent with modern roads has been the most amazing provision of a public utility that any community ever accomplished in a similar period," said Mr. MacDonald. "Historians say the Roman Empire was held together by its highway system, radiating from Rome to the Provinces. But America has converted a continent into a neighborhood within a few years.

"This accomplishment really represents the inauguration of a new system of taxation; a system of licenses and excises levied against particular privileges or classes of property, the proceeds being dedicated to highway development.

"For 1925 state taxes on gasoline aggregated $143,000,000. Add to that $263,500,000 for automobile registration and licenses; $150,000,000 as property taxes on the 20,000,000 automobiles; $143,430,709 as the Federal excise tax on automobiles, parts and accessories for 1925; $50,000,000 to represent wheelage taxes, special taxes on gasoline or cars, and fines collected from motor drivers. The total reaches approximately $749,930,709.

Nearly $1,100,000,000 Yearly Tolls

"But these figures do not include income and corporation taxes derived from the motor car business. Nor do they include state, local, production, corporation or income taxes of the petroleum industry. Yet that industry has a capitalization of about $9,000,000,000. A modest estimate for these, added to the preceding figures, makes a total of $1,094,930,709, which is considerably more than the entire amount spent on country roads.

"You observe that I have not included the government's expenditures of nearly $100,000,000 in Federal aid to road building. In the eight years from 1918 to 1925 inclusive, the Government has contributed $460,000,000 to help the states build roads. That is considerably less than half of what the country spent on roads in either 1924 or 1925. Moreover, in the same eight years, while the Government was distributing that $460,000,000 to the states, it collected $873,000,000 in internal revenue taxes on motor cars, parts and accessories. Other hundreds of millions were collected in income and corporation taxes from motor car manufacturers and dealers. Thus it appears that Federal contribution to roads as compared to the contribution of people who make and use the cars and the gasoline has been decidedly modest.

"But, while Federal contribution is only about 10 per cent of highway expense, it has accomplished results altogether out of proportion to its amount. First, it was an incentive to the States. The Government required them to invest as much as it contributed. Then the Government takes part in a general supervision of construction and a share in determining routes. So we have built roads on better standards, and have got them organized into a truly national system instead of forty-eight state systems.

Unifying the Road System

"Some day it will be realized that this was the most valuable contribution. Driving from Boston to New York, a man may pass through four states. Every one might have a splendid highway system; but if these did not articulate at the state lines the trip would be almost impossible. Thanks to the systematization under Federal influence, country roads are as superior to state boundary lines as are railroads.

"The Federal highway act of 1921 required that a complete nation-reaching system of roads be designated within two years, as the roads to which Uncle Sam would give assistance. It was found that there were 2,866,061 miles of highway in the country. Of these 7 per cent, or 200,624 miles, were to be included in the national system, eligible for Federal aid. Nearly every mile of that 2,866,061 was a candidate for designation as a Federal highway. But in the end the system was laid out as a truly national one.

"When the map was published it showed nearly the 200,000 miles of designated routes. Since then 46,486 miles of these roads have been improved, nearly 13,000 more are under construction, and over 2,000 have been approved for early beginning of work. In addition to that many states have built, without Federal aid, extensive sections which are included within this national system. In fact, these state contributions aggregate 55,000 miles, so that approximately two-thirds of the 200,000 mile national highway system has already been improved.

A Deserved Tribute

The contest for the overthrow of the liquor traffic has been a great one and has continued through many years. Many agencies have contributed—the earlier pledge signing movements, the Good Templar, then the Prohibition party, and chief among the agencies—the tremendous force and spiritual power of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The organized church temperance societies have been no inconsiderable factor.

No agency, however, has had a larger part in this great moral achievement than the Anti Saloon League of America. For more than thirty years it has been the agency which has worked through the churches of all denominations. Non partisan, non denominational—it has enrolled Protestant and Catholic alike. It has been the chief agent, particularly of the Protestant denominations in their united impact against the liquor business. It has maintained a state organization in nearly every state of the Union. It has had not only a state superintendent but district superintendents, and has presented the well-authenticated facts of the prohibition movement in nearly all the pulpits of all the denominations It has conducted great conventions training schools for workers, and has had a force of nearly eight thousand workers. None of these have been highly paid agents. They have almost without exception been men sacrificing for the good of the work. The chief officers of the organization have served without salary.

This organization enlisted men like William Jennings Bryan, who up to the time of the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, gave his services free and generally paid his own expenses while making speeches for the cause of prohibition. Many prominent men of the nation have done likewise, It is to the credit of the Anti-Saloon League that through all these years this well organized force of men throughout the nation has in the main wrought against the most unscrupulous enemy which any group of men ever fought and have come out unscathed and untarnished. The number of men in the Anti-Saloon League who have "gone wrong" are fewer than any Annual Conference of the Church would show among its ministers in a like period of time.

The League has published the most astonishing output of accurate and serviceable literature produced by any organization in the country. Merely to read the last report of Doctor Cherrington who has superintended that branch of the work for a quarter of a century is to be converted to our plan and to our purpose.

The Anti-Saloon League has done a tremendous work on a relatively small capital. It has made comparatively few mistakes. It has had a remarkable devotion on the part of a great company of men and women. It has commanded the respect of business men over a wide area. They have been satisfied with its business method and have gladly contributed the amount necessary to meet its economically administered budget. They are continuing to do so.

The League will be in the fight until the last trench of the enemy is taken. No greater tribute can be given to its efficiency than the virulent attacks which the wets constantly make upon it. It is an old adage that the most clubs are found under the trees which bear the best fruit.

Letter From A Lenawee Log Cabin

There is to be a new road laid out shortly between Adrian and Tecumseh which will run through our place, and probably but a short distance from the house; and if so make it rather more lively for us, or, less retired than at present. Our situation is admired by almost everyone who sees it, and when the trees again recover their verdue will be exceedingly beautiful. Before they are again leafless, I hope thee will have seen it. Aunt Ruth says she cannot give up the idea of thee coming out with uncle She has fully set her mind upon it. Oh, how I wish thee may!

We have not yet had any Indian visitors, and I have seen only two since our removal to Hazelbank. It is said they disposed of the greater part of their horses, of which some of them keep a large stock, last fall, in the expectation of an unusually severe winter. If so, their judgment was correct. I went with brother last First day evening to look at one of their burial mounds which is a short distance from here. It had been apparently opened, for there was a square cavity at the top, and the the earth about it looked fresher than below, but I do not think any curiosities have been discovered in any near here that have been exhumed. Some families who have settled near their "trails," (that is, the paths they usually traverse, I have given the customary term) are frequently visited by them, but they are near us, and unless we were better acquainted with the manners and customs, or they at any rate, have greater propensity to cleanliness than the Pottawatomies appear to possess, I am not sorry to be exempted from the intercourse.

Tecumseh and Adrian, both seem to have nearly doubled in size since we came here last summer, and I believe have done so. The country beyond Adrian is also settling very rapidly. A person from the neighborhood bought land there about two years ago, where there was not a family settled for several miles, There are now eleven families within a mile and a half of them. The lots adjoining ours will probably be taken up in the course of the summer, I hope by families that we shall find agreeable neighbors. We have, so far been very fortunate in that respect and in general we seem to like them better the more we become acquainted with them. Oh! that we could reckon some of our dear old friends among them!

Brother has been deeply engaged in grafting and planting a nursery of young fruit trees. Some of my young mulberry trees he set out a few days since in several locations in the door yard are as tall as myself. Our grain shows beautifully this fine weather; the ground now looks richly green.

I have almost altogether written about ourselves and our concerns, because I know they are to thee the most interesting subject. If I have told thee many trifling things it is because the routine of a farmer's life is made up mostly of such incidents, important only to the actors and to those whose affections interest them. A retired life even in the "back woods" cannot furnish much matter for description after it has once settled down into its usual round of daily vocation especially when all the primary roughness of a back woods life has been polished off.

I wished thee would write again soon, aunt, it is such a comfort to get letters and to hear that you are all well. I, like thee, look for that part of the letter first thing—how many times they are perused afterwards I cannot easily guess, but I don't often skip much, I can assure thee. We are all well, and brother is waiting for me to finish so I must shorten even my last words, and with love to thyself, uncle, and all our friends, bid thee farewell. Do let me hear from you soon.

Thine affectionately.

Book Horse Pulling Contests For State

Michigan's best horseflesh will prove itself next summer during a series of special horse pulling contests to be held at fairs and agricultural meetings scattered all over the state.

Tests of this kind held in the state for the first time during the summer of 1925 aroused so much interest among farmers and other horsemen that the events will be held on a much larger scale during the coming season, according to the farm and horse department at the M. S. C., sponsors of the pulling contests.

The so-called Collins Dynomometer, an ingenious machine which measures accurately the exact pull exerted by each team hitched to the bar, will be used in the contests.

More than a dozen other states will hold similar horse pulling events during the summer, and plans call for a national contest for the winners in each state. Michigan horses last year ranked high among those of the country which entered the tests.

Determining and emphasizing the factors which make for increased pulling power, especially among farm horses, are said to be the real purposes of the contests. The spectacular nature of the tests, with competition frequently reaching stages of keenest excitement, results in a lot of entertainment as well.

Fifteen contests in the lower peninsula, mostly at county fairs, have already been booked, while many are being set for the Upper Peninsula. The horses in the contests are divided into two sections, over and under 3,000 pounds.

Peppermint Crop Is Large In Michigan

That Michigan ranks as one of the three largest peppermint growing sections of the United States is disclosed in a bulletin on the crop just issued by the farm crops department at the M. S. C. Northern Indiana and Oregon are the only other sections which rival the state in output of this crop.

The Michigan area is said to be confined largely to the southwestern counties, climatic and soil requirements for peppermint culture being met satisfactorily in sections of St. Joseph, Cass, Berrien, Van Buren, Allegan and Kalamazoo counties. A growing season of from 100 to 120 days is required, as well as lowland or muck soil.

If one has muck land in a peppermint producing area and there is a mint still in the neighborhood, peppermint can be used profitably in the crop area, says J. R. Duncan crops specialist at the college. Be sure a still is available before starting the peppermint business and be prepared to hold your crop over a year in case of overproduction.

The new bulletin, entitled "Peppermint Growing in Michigan," may be had on request from Dean R S. Shaw, Michigan Experiment Station, East Lansing.

Transforming a couple of miles of steel bars into ring gears for Ford cars is all in the day's work at the Highland Park plant of the Ford Motor Company. Here, ingenious machinery which obviates all possibility of human error furnishes an interesting study in efficiency methods characteristic of Ford manufacture. Quality is closely guarded and the steel that goes into them is constantly held to the most rigid specifications. Arriving at the Highland Park plant in long bars, it is cut to exactly the length required for the finished ring. The steel is heated white hot and in powerful machines. capable of hair's breadth accuracy, is formed into a perfect circle. Then, by means of an electric current of tremendous amperage the butts of the ring are fused into each other, In subsequent operations, the rings are trimmed, hardened and gear teeth cut into them. In the finished product it is impossible to detect the point where the weld was made.

NO WOMAN CAN KEEP HOUSE EFFICIENTLY

Without Good Health

MRS. FRANK DINDORE
823 PIERCE AVENUE, LANCASTER, OHIO

Four Walls Can Make a House, but it takes a Woman to Make a Home

To be a successful homemaker, a woman must guard her health. When mother is not well, the home is upset. Women everywhere are learning through their own personal experiences, as these women did, the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lancaster, Ohio.—"For ten years after my marriage, I had poor health. I was on a visit to my sister in Utica, Michigan, and she had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Her husband got me a bottle and I took it and felt so much better that I got a second one. Now, whenever I feel run-down I take the Vegetable Compound and soon feel all right again. I have had three little girls in the last six years and do all my housework, sewing, washing, and ironing. My time is pretty well taken up, but I will answer any letters I receive."—Mrs. Frank Dindore, 823 Pierve Avenue, Lancaster, Ohio.

Sturgis, Michigan.—"I am very thankful for what your medicine has done for me and have recommended it to others. I took it to give me strength before my baby was born. I would have to stop work and lie down sometimes all the afternoon. I felt as if I did not care whether anything was done or not. I got tired out so easily. One day I found a little book on my porch and that night I showed it to my husband and he went down town and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The medicine has helped me so much that I was soon able to do my work, and when my baby was born, my nurse, Mrs. Forbes, said it was the easiest birth she had ever attended. I will be more than pleased if I am helping someone else by giving my testimonial."—Mrs. Edward Persing, 208 Surprise Ave., Sturgis, Michigan.

Origin of "Match"

The derivation of the term "match" as used in its present sense is obscure. It is probably from the Greek and Latin "myxa," meaning a nozzle of a lamp. In 1337 we find reference in literature to matches, the name being applied to the wick of a candle or lamp. The earliest reference to matches in their present sense is found in 1530.

"We have sent for you to look with your own eyes upon this robber of the trap-lines and defiler of the night; this dog whom Laflamme, the trader at Ogoke, sent to fill the hearts of your women and children with fear.

"At his great post on Lake Ogoke he would welcome you at the spring trade, but Black Baptiste, and Antoine and the others, would soon be among your tipis offering the water that burns and fills your heads with fire, to your women and your young men. You would trade the pelts which you toiled for through the moons of the long snows for this stinging water which steals your senses. And when he had your fur, he would give you a little flour and tea, and some shells for your guns and send you away. But," and the voice of Michel rose in hoarse crescendo, "your women and children would weep through the freezing moons for the trade goods and the flour which Laflamme cheated you out of with his magic water. This is why he sent Pierre, here, to drive you out of the country of your fathers."

"Ataia! tiwe! It is so! He speaks the truth!" shouted the inflamed circle of swart-faced hunters.

"You ask why this white man," continued Michel, "comes to this country in the freezing moon and brings the dog with the great voice to hunt this Windigo," and the Iroquois kicked the frozen shape at his feet, "when he lives far in the South and will not suffer from what Laflamme does to the Ojibways. This is his answer:

"In the moon of the gathering of the wild rice, he, with David, here, journeying from Wailing River to Nepigon House, stopped at the post of Laflamme. There was trouble and because they were friends of M'sieu St. Onge and knew of the water of fire which the Fathers at Ottawa have forbidden the traders to give the Ojibways, Laflamme sent his men to murder them at the falls of the Jackfish. But these men you see here, who have trapped the Windigo of Laflamme, laugh at the white-water. They travel in a magic canoe, and because their shells were stolen by Laflamme, all except one, and their guns empty, they could not fight, but with that shell shot one of the dogs of the trader. Then they ran the great strong-water which the canoe of no Indian has ever passed."

An undertone of surprise and admiration followed the words of the speaker, for there were some in the audience who knew the Frying Pan on the Jackfish.

"This is why they ask for ten of your best young men to join them in avenging the death of your kinsmen. They and I, Michel, whom you know, have sworn an oath that this Laflamme shall not see the snows fade nor the ice rot at Ogoke in the moon of the breaking of the snowshoes. We have given our word, each to each, that not again shall he steal the pelts of the Ojibways with his magic water. If you are men you will send us ten of your young hunters with their dogs, that they may trap these wolves in their den and the skies above Ogoke may redden with the flames of the post where the Indian is cheated and turned out to starve."

"Ataia! Enh-enh! Yes, yes, we will do it!" shouted the aroused hunters, at the conclusion of the appeal for aid.

Then the American addressed the Indians, while the man from Nepigon put his words into their native tongue.

"You have heard the words of the head-man from Wailing River. He is my friend and he speaks for me. My home is far in the country to the south, but I shall not return until this trader, Laflamme, who cheats the Ojibways with his whisky, is driven from Ogoke. He may have sent others to howl in the night and terrify your women. We must hunt them down. At Wailing River lives an honest trader who gives you full value for your pelts in flour and trade-goods. He is the friend of the Ojibway. Send us your ablest young men, who can shoot straight and do not fear the men of Laflamme, that we may rid the country of this wolverine, that you may trade without fear at the post at the rapids of the Wailing."

Back to their winter camps went the Indians with the tale of Laflamme's Windigo, Pierre, while the three friends waited for Little Jacques, and made their plans.

In three days the Cree arrived, driving a plodding six-dog team loaded with provisions. He handed Steele two letters. The American thrilled as he saw on one his name written in a feminine hand, but he opened the other first and read aloud to his friends.

As St. Onge narrated how Tete-Boule, Laflamme's spy, had lured him away from the post with the forged message from Michel, David raised his mittened fists in helpless rage. "By gar, an' I had heem een dees hands—een dees hands!" he cried, glaring at Steele.

As he read of the fury of Laflamme, culminating in the wreck of the violin, Steele's hands shook with his wrath—then pity for her swept him. "Poor, poor girl!" he murmured, "She has lost everything—she is indeed alone."

"Well," he said to the others, "the debt grows larger, my friends. Remember the violin, David, when your time comes!" Then Steele opened the letter from Denise, which ran:

"My dear Monsieur Steele:

"Our hearts are filled with happiness at your success. After the toil and the danger, you have won, and I thank you for your goodness to me and to my father—you, a stranger, who might have passed on, and forgotten. It was a house of despair that you found, and you brought hope. Already you may have guessed, monsieur, that we have feared all along that the Windigo was the creature of Laflamme. But there was no proof.

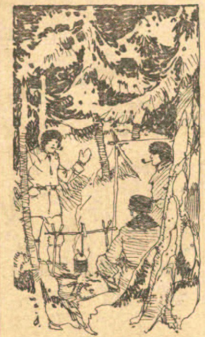
"You are going to Ogoke, Monsieur Steele, on a desperate venture. It may be that we shall never meet again. For this reason you will understand when I say that you are a very gallant gentleman—that we—I, shall never forget. Bon chance!

"Denise St. Onge."

Steele again read the letter, seeking what was not there. At last he folded it and turned away to hide his disappointment from his curious friends. No, he mused, it is only too true. She has, as she says, forgotten nothing.

* * * * * * *

Shortly, each day was marked by the arrival of galloping dog teams from the east, south and west, driven by lean, wild-looking Ojibways, keen for the adventure—picked men, chosen by their people for their endurance on the winter trails, their proved nerve, and their "bush craft." When the last team had come in, Jacques was sent down river with a letter and orders to meet the party later on the Upper Wailing, with a sled-load of supplies. Steele then outlined his plan to the Indians.



The Three Friends Waited for Little Jacques and Made Their Plans.

Dividing into four parties they were to proceed up the Wailing valley by different routes to avoid betraying their purpose if seen by any of Laflamme's people. It was probable that the trader had sent more than one man to spread terror of the Windigo through the country, although there was small chance that he had at Ogoke another Indian with the marvelous imitative faculty of Pierre. Therefore on their way to the lake, the hunters were to visit the trapping camps to learn of the possible activity of other night howlers in the region, whom they were to hunt down.

Soon, when their man failed to return, the people of Laflamme would taste their own medicine. Fear of the unknown fate which had overtaken Pierre and the rest would slowly chill their blood. And when their search parties did not come back, their hearts would soften as the ice rots under the April sun, and the Indian and half-breed followers of the trader would steal away in the night as men shun the smallpox. Then it would be an easy matter to rush the post, take Laflamme, Big Antoine and Baptiste, and send them to the railroad for trial.

Including the Indians which David and Steele saw in October, they estimated that Laflamme had twelve or fifteen men at the post. As the success of the whole venture depended on secrecy, no Indian, sent with supplies to the Windigo down river, no member of a search party could be allowed to escape and bring the news to Laflamme. That would remove the element of mystery—spoil the plan, which had for its object, first, the stampeding of Laflamme's "bush" Indians through superstitious fear concerning the fate of their friends.

Much as his two swart lieutenants would have welcomed open war with Laflamme, they agreed that the siege of Ogoke must be one of secrecy and craft. Once the Indians deserted, it would be possible gradually to pick up any hunting parties by closing in and sending men to watch the trails near the post, until Laflamme was driven in self-defense to leave, or they took him. With the post deserted, the Ojibways of the upper valley would bring their fur to Wailing River for the Christmas trade, and St. Onge's future was assured.

For two days the impatient men waited for a dog-team from the post, eighteen miles up the lake, to pass the outlet. Then Michel and David, taking Wagosh and two of the hunters, started through the forest to locate a camp near Ogoke, from which all trails taken by hunting parties to the back country could be watched, for Laflamme would need much meat to feed his people.

Days passed with no news from Michel. Steele was disturbed, but he had three men out hunting meat and could not leave the outlet. Then, one afternoon at dusk, David came in behind his dogs. Ahead of the team, breaking trail in the new snow, walked a sinister-faced half-breed and an Indian, shoulders and elbows thrust stiffly back, and Steele saw that their upper arms were bound together with rawhide.

"Where did you pick these up?" asked Steele.

Then Steele learned, while David ate his supper, that with the aid of their skinning knives as threats, the latter and Michel had finally forced the half-breed to talk. The failure of Pierre, who had been away a month, to return to the post was worrying Laflamme. Two men, one following the other, had been sent downriver to learn what had become of the two Windigo. The first scout now was long overdue. Already some of the Indians had left in the night with their families. The others were ready to stampede. Something was the matter in the lower valley of the Wailing.

In the thick timber of a little valley five miles back of the post, Steele found the camp of Michel. A well-traveled trail to the country hunted by the post people ran within a mile, and was constantly watched. Here they had picked up the prisoners brought back by David, and, as the post depended for meat on the moose of the region beyond, here the crafty Michel knew he would get the searchers sent by Laflamme to find the missing men. And when, in time, the search party in turn disappeared into the mysterious maw of the wilderness, the Iroquois was satisfied that a nameless dread would enter the hearts of the people of Ogoke. Already six men had gone out from the post, never to return, and when they had got this search party, he told Steele, he doubted if an Indian would dare remain.

Love at First Hand Great Thing in Life

First love comes before the age of knowledge. It is the only love entirely unencumbered with ideas and preconceptions. How little it has to do with words, with talk! It knows no terms. It is the thing itself from which terms and institutions have grown up. First lovers get love at first hand, instead of getting first the idea of romance into which to try to fit themselves and other people, Louise Townsend Nicoll writes, in the Century. They seldom talk. They get acquainted in other ways—by being near each other, by looking at each other, by softly shyly touching hands. They do things together—play games, run races. As watchful as small animals, they learn minutely each about the other. But they do not talk.

They give each other things, always in fair exchange, and wear them out with carrying about. When they must know facts to supplement their findings, they ask—short, blunt questions. Opinion and discussion have little play.

Made Millions Laugh

The real name of the famous circus clown, Dan Rice, was Daniel McLaren and he was nicknamed as a child for an old Irish clown. He began his professional career as an acrobat and clown with Seth B. Howe, circus owner, 1845. He was a partner in Spaulding's circus until the outbreak of the Civil war. After the Civil war he was financially unfortunate, but was engaged by Adam Forepaugh at a salary of $35,000 a year, afterward increased to $1,000 a week. He retired from the stage in 1882. He was exceedingly lavish with money for charity. On one occasion he gave President Lincoln $32,000 for the benefit of wounded soldiers and their dependents. He died in February, 1900.

Monkeys Popular Pets

In Pattani nearly every hut has one or two monkeys chained in the doorway, and the natives walk about followed by monkeys attached to long coir ropes.

Device Clears Spray From Ship's Lookout

One of the most responsible positions in the world is that of the man on the bridge directing the course of a great ship. For him, clear, certain and unobstructed vision is imperative at all times, and especially so in a driving storm when sight is most difficult. His eyes must be protected as he looks out, and a clear sheet of glass is the obvious suggestion. But rain and spray and snow drive against the glass and accumulate upon it, and the most constant wiping of the surface, even by the most untiring mechanical devices, is often of little avail. Suddenly and quite recently there has come a solution of this perplexity and, as usual, a very simple one. A polished glass disk, rotated by an electric motor at such a speed that nothing can be deposited on it that will adhere for an instant, is the solution of the problem. The device is being manufactured by a responsible English firm and distributed on both sides of the Atlantic.—Compressed Air Magazine.

The Wonderful Alps

The Alps have about 180 prominent peaks that vary in height from 4,000 to 15,732 feet, this last being the height of Mount Blanc, the loftiest eminence in Europe. Perpetual snow lies above 8,200 feet.

Detroit's Prospects for Expansion

FROM all parts of the north-central states are homeseekers flocking to Detroit—looking for a clean, wholesome, vigorous growing city. In the great north-west sub-divisions of Grand River Avenue, such as Brightmoor, Redford, Southlawn Westlawn and Strathmoor, all adjacent to Telegraph Road, which is destined to be the most busy thoroughfare of Detroit'e famous West Side, they are finding the goal.

In this exclusive residential district ncar enough to be handy, yet far enough to get away from the city's sullen roar, they are buying homc-sites, which ere-long will receive the profits of a great suburb fostered by the B. E. Taylor interests.
If you doubt this, come up and inspect it, then see or call DICK McBAIN, Moscow Mich.

Found Novel Way to Initiate New Deacons

Some years ago on the Sunday following the one when several new deacons had been ordained in a certain church, the older deacons thought of a way to initiate the new ones. After seating the students from the Blind institute, who frequently attend the church, in the front pews, they handed hymn books to the new deacons with instructions to give them to the people without hymn books in the front pews. The church aisle was a long one and one can readily understand the embarrassment that the new deacons felt when, after the opening of the service, they walked the full length of the aisle and discovered that the worshipers to whom they handed the hymnals were blind.—Indianapolis News.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Nation Contending With Paralyzing General Strike of Unions.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN entered on one of the most critical periods of her recent history last week. Because the mine owners and miners could reach no settlement of their disputes and the government would not longer continue the mine subsidy, the miners of the nation had struck. This was bad enough, but the general trades union congress promptly ordered that the miners be supported by a general strike of about 5,000,000 union workers to begin at midnight Monday. Prime Minister Baldwin, declaring the constitutional rights had been challenged, asserted negotiations could not proceed until the general strike order had been withdrawn. The king issued a proclamation of state emergency under which Baldwin was empowered to rule by decrees and which made Sir William Mitchell-Thomson, postmaster general, the economic dictator of the country. The law does not permit the prime minister to order compulsory military service or industrial conscription, but every other step to meet the situation was taken by the government and volunteer workers by thousands came to the front.

At the appointed time the general strike went into effect, the first workers called out being those in transport, including railways, ships and docks; printing, including the press; metal and heavy chemical groups; building trades except those at work on hospitals and housing; electricity and gas, including power lines. Of these only the chemical workers did not obey the call. Sanitary and health services were not interrupted. All over the United Kingdom business was paralyzed, and in various parts of London and other cities and towns there was bloody rioting. Naturally the situation was most serious in London and the government's efforts to meet it were concentrated there, though troops and warships were moved to strategic points elsewhere.

Organized labor in America, France, Belgium and other countries showed sympathy for the miners' strike but rather refrained from approval of the general strike. Soviet Russia, however, did not hesitate to show its delight at the plight of Great Britain, and it was reported that the Moscow government had forbidden the export of foodstuffs to England. The French miners took steps to prevent the shipment of French coal across the channel.

As the days went on the situation gradually improved, according to the statements in the British Gazette, the government's newspaper. This was notably true of railway transportation of the food supply and the light and power services.

Prime Minister Baldwin told the house of commons that "the general strike threatens the existence of the ordered government and comes nearer to a proclamation of civil war than we have known for hundreds of years." This would appear to be true; but the assertion of labor leaders and of Lloyd George, that not 90 per cent of organized labor in Great Britain would vote for a revolution, seems equally true, because almost all the workers are of British nationality and at heart loyal to their country.

At this writing there are rumors afloat in London that some sort of a compromise will soon be reached. It is difficult to understand how this can be, since the government cannot and will not recede from its position that the strike must be called off before negotiations can be reopened, and the trades union congress still has plenty of funds and claims that the workers' response to the strike call exceeded all expectations.

FRANCE felt the effect of the British strike when the franc began to tumble, reaching on Thursday the new low mark of 32.14 to the dollar. Finance Minister Peret, who called a conference of bankers, said he thought the franc's fall was due to the sale of francs by the British government to bolster up the pound sterling. The French produce markets also were glutted because of the crippling of shipping lines to England. In Paris the debt settlement with the United States was considered to be contributory to the crash of the franc, for the opposition groups in the parliament were preparing for an attack on the Briand cabinet on the score of the arrangement signed in Washington by Ambassador Berenger.

In the United States senate, also, the settlement will be assailed by the group headed by Borah, Reed of Missouri and Pat Harrison of Mississippi. Harrison has asked a public hearing at which the terms agreed upon can be attacked and defended. This group probably cannot prevent ratification by the senate, but it could delay this consummation injuriously.

ON MONDAY, for the tenth time in the history of the United States, the senate sat as a court of impeachment when Federal Judge English of the eastern district of Illinois was summoned for trial on the charges preferred by the house of representatives. Vice President Dawes presided and nearly every senator was in his seat. The defendant, through counsel, made a general and particular denial of all the charges against him. On Wednesday, when the case was resumed, Senator Willis of Ohio moved to postpone the trial until November 10, mainly for the reason that the senators, especially the 34 who come up for re-election on November 2, will be "more composed in their minds and in better humor in the cool of November than if they took up their duties as judges during the broiling heat that soon will envelop Washington." Despite bitter opposition the motion carried, it being understood that Mr. English shall not sit as a judge in the interim.

THERE was rejoicing in army circles when the house passed the five-year program bill for the army air service. The expenditure of $75,000,000 for new airplanes, two 6,000,000 cubic foot capacity dirigibles, and a number of training balloons, is expected to make available 1,728 airplanes for active flying units of the regular army and 371 for allocation to National Guard and organized reserve flying units. By providing for the training of enlisted men as pilots, the creation of temporary ranks in the corps, and correction of existing injustices in flying pay the bill is counted upon to relieve conditions which have caused complaint in the present air service.

CORN BELT congressmen and the farm organizations that are supporting the Haugen price fixing farm relief bill served notice on the Republican and Democratic leaders that they will not accept the Tincher bill or any other as a substitute for the Haugen measure. However, passage of their pet bill in the house now seems less likely than ever, since some of the Southern Democrats on whom they relied, are backsliding. These Southerners say the tariff features of the Haugen measure would commit them to support of the protective tariff principle.

JAMES E. WATSON, who seeks to succeed himself as senator from Indiana, easily defeated Claris Adams of Indianapolis for the Republican nomination. Senator Arthur Robinson was nominated to fill out the unexpired part of the late Senator Ralston's term. For the Democratic nomination there were six candidates, and as none of them obtained a clear majority the choice of a man to oppose Watson is left to the state Democratic convention.

THE house judiciary committee reported its second impeachment resolution of the session last week, recommending favorable action on a resolution seeking authority for a full investigation of impeachment charges against Frederick A. Fenning, District of Columbia commissioner. Charges relative to activities of Mr. Fenning in receiving fees for acting as guardian for insane veterans and other wards of the local courts have been aired before the house committees on District of Columbia affairs and on veterans' legislation.

REPRESENTATIVE EDITH NOURSE ROGERS of Massachusetts made her maiden speech in the house, pleading for passage of the Johnson bill to include as eligible for hospitalization those World war veterans whose service records do not clearly indicate their disabilities are the direct result of their service in the army or navy. Mrs. Rogers was warmly applauded but the bill was shelved when it was shown that estimates of its cost to the government varied from $500,000 to many millions a year.

PEACE negotiations between the Riffians and the French and Spanish at Oudja, Morocco, broke down completely when the tribesmen demanded that the allies release fifty prisoners in exchange for as many which they were willing to set free, as a preliminary to further discussion. The French offensive against Abd-el-Krim had been prepared and began promptly, the attacking columns striking north toward the Mediterranean.

PROBABLY very few people in this country knew there was another revolution in progress in Nicaragua. Well, there is, and it has gone so far that the Nicaraguan government has declared a state of war. This seems an unwise step for it virtually recognizes the rebels as belligerents and gives them the privilege of obtaining arms and munitions from neutral countries. The movement is led by Luis Beltram Sandoval and Elizeo Duarte. They have captured Bluefields and other towns and at last accounts were in control of the Rio Grande valley, which is the great banana belt. They stole $160,000 in unissued currency from the safe of the Bluefields branch of the National bank of Nicaragua, which is chartered under the laws of Connecticut and of which Robert F. Loree of New York is president. The American cruiser Cleveland has been sent to Bluefields.

WARD T. VAN ORMAN with the Goodyear IV won the national elimination balloon race that started at Little Rock, Ark., and will again represent the United States in the international contest for the Bennett cup. Van Orman landed near Petersburg, Va., having made 848 miles. This beat last year's international mark by eight miles.

NORGE, the great airship in which Amundsen and Ellsworth hope to sail over the North pole, started from Leningrad for Kings Bay, Spitzbergen, Wednesday, and made a successful flight to Vadsoe, northern Norway, where it stopped for fuel. The date of the start from Kings Bay has not been announced but it probably will be soon for Amundsen does not wish the Byrd expedition to get ahead of him. Byrd and his party already are at Kings Bay but were delayed by a mishap to one of their Fokker planes.

SEVEN long-term convicts from Chicago escaped from the Illinois penitentiary at Stateville after murdering a deputy warden and kidnaping a guard and a trusty. Five of them a few hours later encountered a posse in the village of Leonore and an exciting battle ensued. Three of the posse were wounded, one of the convicts was shot full of holes and three others were caught.

MOST notable of the week's deaths was that of Oscar S. Straus of New York, an eminent diplomat and the first Jew to hold a position in an American cabinet. He was appointed minister to Turkey by Cleveland and later was a member of the arbitration court at The Hague. President Roosevelt made him secretary of commerce and labor, and in 1909 he returned to Turkey as ambassador. He was Progressive candidate for the governorship of New York in 1911.

Prince Victor Napoleon, Bonapartist pretender to the throne of France, died in Brussels and his little son, Louis Napoleon, became the chief of the house of Bonaparte, to "reign" under the regency of his mother.

John W. Thompson of St. Louis, who was convicted with Colonel Forbes of defrauding the government was saved from prison by death.

Insanity Defense of Mussolini's Assailant

Rome.—Defense counsel for Miss Violet Albina Gibson, sister of Lord Ashbourne, who attempted to assassinate Premier Mussolini on April 7, will plead that she is insane and will ask life confinement to an insane asylum.

A judicial committee, including the prosecutor, Miss Gibson's defenders and medical experts, paid the visit prescribed by law upon the premier, in order to judge the gravity of his wound. The committee reported that the wound in the premier's nose, caused by a pistol bullet of small caliber, was entirely healed.

Prof. Enrico Ferri, who is considered one of the greatest exponents of Italian criminal law, is attached to Miss Gibson's group of counsel. Premier Mussolini, upon seeing Professor Ferri, said that he was pleased "that Miss Gibson would be defended with the serenity of science."

There was a possibility, Professor Ferri said, that the defense might include in its testimony regarding the mental condition of Miss Gibson a psychological study of Mussolini himself.

Several times during her life, Professor Ferri said, Miss Gibson had been confined in insane asylums in England and Italy and had attempted suicide. On one occasion, some years ago, she tried to kill a girl friend with a knife, saying that she desired to repeat the sacrifice of Isaac by Abraham.

Ionia—John C. Kendle, Lansing, state supervisor of music, spoke before the Ionia City club here recently. The organization has slated Eugene Davenport, dean and professor emeritus of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, for May 18.

Ishpeming—Peter Carlyon, 90 years old, former world's champion Cornish style wrestler, died here May 6. A half century ago Carlyon won the world's title from Tom Karkeet after 10 years' training in the famous English sport which formed one of the main diversions of the miners in this region.

Ferndale—Bonds to the amount of $810,000 have been sold to Joel Stockard and company, of Detroit, and associates by the village of Ferndale. Of the total issue $600,000 is for paving by special assessment, the remaining $210,000 being the issue recently voted to take care of the paving and sewer and water installations in 31 streets.

Pontiac—A twoneaded lamb that took nourishment with both mouths, bellowed with both, was able to see out of its four perfect eyes and lived for an hour and a half, was brought to Pontiac recently by F. R. Newton, manager of a Pontiac meat market. The animal was born on the farm of Newton's brother, Roy, near Goodells, St. Clair county.

Battle Creek—Representative Joseph L. Hooper, of this city, has taken under advisement an invitation to deliver an address before the National Council of Parent-Teachers' association, at Grand Rapids the latter part of May. Representative Hooper advised the organization that he will reserve his final decision contingent on the adjournment of congress.

Ann Arbor—University of Michigan's third annual honors convocation in which over 290 seniors and undergraduates received public recognition for meritorious work was held May 5 in Hill's auditorium. Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, pastor of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Detroit and former president of Northwestern University, gave the principal address.

Charlevoix—A seaplane with 12-passenger and a half-ton baggage capacity has been acquired in New Jersey by the Beaver Island Air Service, which has previously purchased two planes. The three ships will be used in the transportation of passengers between Northern Michigan resorts and attempts will be made to obtain a contract with the Post Office Department to carry mail to the island during the winter.

Ionia—The C. M. T. C. quota for Ionia county will be filled, according to Mayor Fred W. Green, county chairman who reports 10 young men accepted for the training in August. They are John Kowatch, of next year's high school grid team; Wilson Dalzell, Vance Kauffman, Horace Winchell, Elmer Rowley, George Bradner, Gale Burridge, Herbert Winges, Harold Humphrey, all of Ionia, and Joseph Friedly of Belding.

Albion—By a vote of the senior class of Albion college, Miss Woodena Tench of this city, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Tench, has been awarded the Penhellenic cup, given annually to the best "all around" senior co-ed. Miss Tench received the vote of every woman in the class of over one hundred. The Albion co-ed has been especially prominent in debating and drama production. She is a member of the Delta Gamma sorority.

Lansing—Shelly B. Hutchinson, of this city, who claimed to have established in 1895 the first trading stamp business, has lost in the Supreme Court at Washington a suit against William M. Sperry and others to recover stock in Sperry & Hutchinson, a New Jersey corporation organized to carry it on. The appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Hutchinson contended he was not properly compensated for his holdings in the company.

Manistee—The first timberland in Manistee County to be registered under the commercial timber reserve act of last year is a Manistee Township tract owned by Dr. J. J. Reycroft, of Petoskey. It has been approved as such by the State Department of Conservation. The forest contains tamaracks and other low land evergreens The property is the center of controversy relative to the deepening of the Gromer Drain. Its owner contends the trees would be killed if the land is drained.

Saginaw—With interest in Saginaw's oil field prospects growing rapidly as a result of recent developments and particularly on the praise given the field recently by State Geologist R. A. Smith, when he said he believed the business district of the city of Saginaw lies over the center of a pool of oil, that the little bit of territory where the present oil wells are being sunk is capable of taking care of 100 more wells and that the oil is as good as the Pennsylvania oil, attention is being focused on the three wells now being drilled.

Lansing—Lansing police made 370 arrests of men and women in April according to the monthly report of the police department. The month showed an increase in arrests over that of April, 1925, when 346 arrests were made. Liquor was involved in 116 of the arrests; 75 men and women were charged with intoxication, 16 for driving while intoxicated, one for being a tippler, and 24 were jailed for violation of the state liquor law. Disorderly charges were filed against 71 persons during the month. Attempted murder caused the arrest of two.

"It's a good thing the bard's house wasn't destroyed, too. That little white cottage where Shakespeare is supposed to have been born—'the house'—that is what interests the visitors to Stratford.

"A queer lot the visitors are. A young fellow in a leather coat and goggles got off a motorcycle one day, went through the bard's house reverently, and then said, as he tipped the attendant a shilling:

Rev: Robert Brown on The 18th Amendment

A small crowd heard Rev. Robert Brown of Ann Arbor, sent out by the Anti-Saloon League at the Methodist church Sunday morning May 2nd but those who did attend were well repaid. Firstly, it is self-evident that Rev. Brown is thoroughly conversant with the temperance cause, as he has relatives who have been wheel horses in this work since the country went dry.

He went into details of the inception of the Volstead Law, back in 1919, when all America decided to get on the wagon. He compared conditions here with those in the neighboring provinces of Canada where they claim to have "personal liberty" in great gobs. For instance just across the border in King George's domains under Government supervision, conditions are dark and sordid. He says investigators in Ontario have visited the government distilleries, and found the employees drunken, and liquor being passed out to all who had the price, regardless of persons. Signs on the wall requesting patrons to go away before opening bottles are as little regarded as a sheep in a Kansas cyclone, and immense piles of abandoned liquor bottles belie the signs.

In Quebec drunkenness is paramount. Rev. Brown related the well-known incident of Ex-Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes, who refused to take the case of the Wets when they desired to retire the Volstead Law, although the damp aggregation could blow ten dollar bills out of their noses and fairly dripped double eagles. Rev. Brown attributed Mr. Hughes' motives to ecclesiastical ancestry, but as a matter of fact the question is yet a guess, as to whether the great American buckled on the price of the job, or he positively could not stand defeat. The job was finally snapped up by that "cheap skate" Elihu Root, who probably got a million dollars or so, notwithstanding he lost the case. The poor soppy boys found the Volstead Act was on the statute books to stay and they could not impeach it.

Rev. Brown admitted the quantity of home made hooch which so many people are drinking; and also that the Anti-Saloon League had been particularly unfortunate in some of its managers in certain districts, but this could not be helped. He compared the situation to a farmer putting a fox to watch over his chicken coop or a wolf to tend his sheep. He stated the Wets had been fighting the case with the best legal counsel in the world—but their suit up to date had been nolle prossed.

Nothing can turn the great electorate of this nation from the present law, and beer and light wines can never obtain a hearing—in other words John Barleycorn may register a hit but he'll die on first. After they weary of present methods the Wets will try something else a little less legal; however this may be the temperance people of the land will keep their lamps trimmed and burning.

Officers in charge of the Military training camp at Camp Custer report that applications are coming in very rapidly for student soldiers at Custer for the summer. Athletics and all kinds of amusement will be fostered for this place and on Sunday the very highest order of religious services will be afforded the men in camp the same as if at home, in fact better in many instances. If your boy longs for a season of outing of a month or so in which he can hike and take photos of the picturesque spots in southern Michigan send him to the Training Camp at Custer for a diversion. Here he will meet hundreds of the best boys in the state and under highly trained and gentlemanly officers he will learn the elements of good citizenship mixed with military training. Nothing fits a man for the duties of life as does this out-door setting up exercises and discipline. Any boys between 17 and 24 years of age wishing to apply for this training can call at this office. No expense attached to this except the boy furnishes four suits of underwear, six pairs of socks, towels, shaving tools.

A letter received recently from Bert T. Morehouse states that he accidentally met Mrs. Jennie Terrien, of Sterling Illinois, who was formerly Miss Jennie Bennett a preceptress in the North Adams High school back 30 years ago. She will be pleasantly remembered as having taught here under Professor E. D. Reynolds of Rockford, and was noted for her discipline. Mrs. Terrien is still at the teaching game in Brown's Business College in Sterling. Mrs. Bennett—Terrien sends word to all of her former pupils in the vicinity of North Adams to write to her as she is interested in knowing their present status and whereabouts.

A New Sailing Ship

When we read a few months ago of a new boat being constructed to move by wind motors, in Germany we scouted the idea that such a boat would ever prove a success.

Herr Anton Flettner, of Bremen is the inventor of one of these ships and recently he launched it in Bremen and its maiden trip will be made to New York in July. Actual trials of this species of boat have demonstrared that the well equipped sailing vessel can outrun it anywhere, but the inventor hopes to so improve the boat as to make it practical. The principle is simply that of the windmill, except Herr Flettner uses turbine wheels incased in round steel tubes of which there are two on the deck similar to masts 60 feet or about in height. When the wind blows these turbines generate considerabie power which is transmitted to the propeller, and the ship moves through the water. The boat is fitted with an oil engine for use in calms—also hooked to the propeller. One ship, the "Baden Baden" built by the same man, recently made a trip to New York at an average of 220 miles per day.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

Thomas and Elizabeth Chandler to William Chandler
Logan Township, Lenawee County
Michigan, Sept. 8, 1830.

My Dear Brother:

About six weeks have elapsed since we have been inhabitants of the Western country, and no doubt thee must feel anxious to know how we, to whom the change is so very great, are pleased with our location in this "land of promise" and I am happy to inform thee that we like it very much, and have all enjoyed good health since our arrival.

In passing through the State of New York, I made a practice of observing closely the land in the new settlements, in order to compare it with that of Michigan, and as far as my judgment is correct, the latter is much preferable. In some respects greatly so. After spending a few days in viewing the land, I was much better pleased with the locality near Adrian than of Tecumseh—We, therefore have taken a room in the home of Friend Comstock as a temporary residence and I have chosen a lot adjoining his farm, which is said by everyone who has seen it to be some of the best land in the country.

I will try to give thee a description. The soil, I believe, is a sandy loam, very different from Jersey though, and very easy of cultivation, and produces good crops, although corn or wheat has been on the field for several successive years, no deterioration is apparent There are large tracts of land denominated as oak openings which do not offer half the obstacles to settlers, which they are compelled to encounter in clearing heavily timbered land. On these the trees are principally white oak and none of such enormous size, in many places not standing much thicker than in an apple orchard. I have taken an eighty acre lot of this description which takes in a portion of meadow or river bottom. It is a very pleasant situation about half way between the town of Adrian and Tecumseh and about half a mile from the River Raisin and one mile from Friends meeting. And within the distance of about a mile and a half we shall have eight or ten neighbors whom I know of. It is probable there are more.

A stage runs daily to and from these towns. We have taken a passage several times without charge Quite a convenience, isn't it.?

We are now about erecting a log house on a gentle rise of ground. which commands a fine view of our neighbor Comstock's whose buildings and house in particular form a prominent feature in the scene, and from there gives it almost the appearance of an old settled country. Indeed, it is very pleasant to stand at the door of our house in the woods, and have a view of the two large farm barns and a house which would receive and deserve the appellation of "first rate" in any part of the country, and reflect that four years ago this was a wilderness. Our humble dwelling is composed of logs. Its dimensions twenty by twenty six feet. I hired a man to erect the log part, and undertook the carpenter business myself at which I have succeeded rather better than I had expected. I had the assistance of a carpenter three or four days in putting on the roof and gable ends, and employed him to make the sash. I think I have saved a considerable by doing the rest myself, as carpenter's wages are from a dollar to a dollar and a half a day, and the one I employed told me, while we were shingling, that by working myself I was saving a dollar a day.

The oak-openings present a different appearance from any other country I have seen. The trees are generally not very large, but straight and tall. In some places they are almost free from underbrush, with the ground covered with grass and wild flowers. In the early part of the season these openings are said to represent a wide extended flower garden, and even at the time of our arrival in the latter part of August, the variety of wild flowers was very considerable and in some places had a very beautiful appearance, offering a delightful place for a promenade. Aunt Ruth and Elizabeth have sometimes wandered in the woods without fear, though there is but little cause for fear. There are said to be no rattle-snakes except in the swamps, and wild beasts are seldom seen. I have seen several wild turkeys since coming here when I have had no gun with me and pigeons in abundance.

Uncle Sam as Road Supervisor

"Along with all of this, there is the Federal supervision over construction and maintenance. When Uncle Sam helps build a road he reserves authority to require its proper maintenance. Then there is the business of uniform marking along highways, which makes it possible for motorists to drive thousands of miles on a designated route whose markings become so familiar that after a few miles he need not ask directions.

"Finally Federal participation has made possible a great number of bridges at strategic points. Some of these have been needed for years, yet state and local authorities have been unable to provide them, partly because of the cost, partly because of competition between routes. When a stream separates two counties, or two states, it is often impossible to get them to agree where to build or how to divide the cost of a bridge. In such cases the Federal authority has repeatedly mediated differences and secured construction. Let me mention some instances.

"Missouri has been a state for over a century. Divided east and west by the Missouri river, communication between the two sections has been limited, to the state's disadvantage. Four bridges across the river were required in the national highway program, and Federal co-operation with the state of Missouri has made them possible. Two are completed, the others are under construction. The four will cost a little more than $2,000,000, the Federal contribution being nearly $1,000,000.

Getting Bridges Constructed

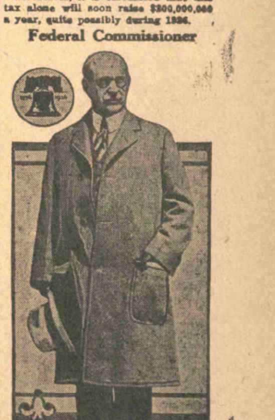
"Another bridge that has a peculiar importance, both locally and nationally, has been needed for generations across Raritan bay, New Jersey. It is one of the links in the chain of communication between New York city and the country at large. In 1924 New Jersey had some $700,000 of Federal aid allotted to her roads and in 1925 over $1,000,000. So the state agreed that this Raritan bridge should be built, costing about $4,000,000. Federal funds made up about one-third of the amount. The bridge, over a mile and a half long, is now nearly completed.

"Such illustrations might be multiplied indefinitely. National participation has repeatedly made possible the accomplishment of vitally important highway development."

According to the American Petroleum Institute, the gasoline tax was first imposed in 1919 in Oregon. It has now been adopted by all the states except New York, Illinois, New Jersey and Massachusetts. The tendency has been continually to increase the rate of tax per gallon. As late as 1921 gasoline taxes for the entire country were only about $5,000,000; in 1922, $12,000,000; in 1923, almost $37,000,000; in 1924, $79,000,000, and in 1925, $142,987,749.

With good prospects that the "gas" tax will be adopted soon by states which do not have it now and with the gallonage rates being increased in other states, it is calculated that this tax alone will soon raise $300,000,000 a year, quite possibly during 1926.

Federal Commissioner

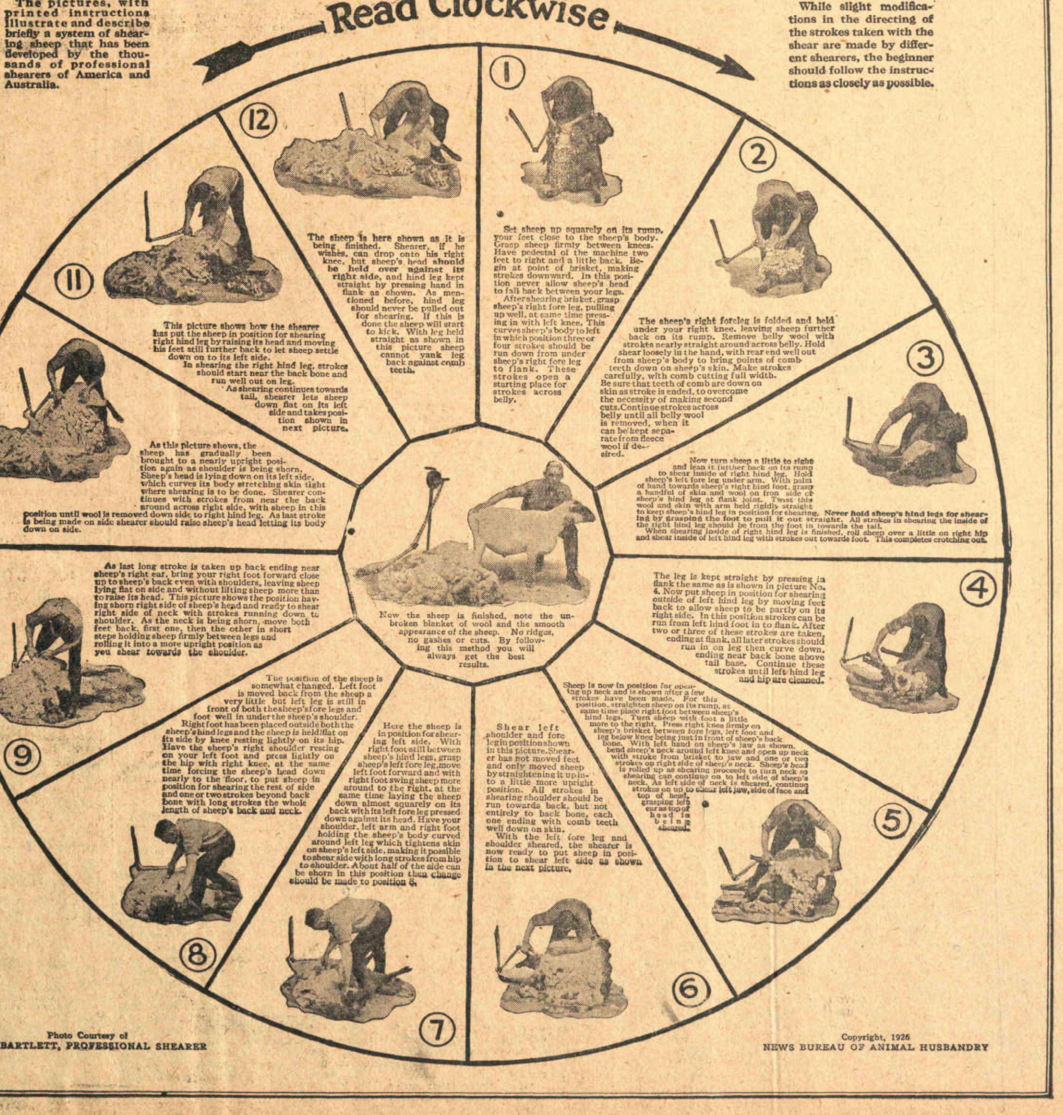


Rear Admiral H. O. Stickney, retired, who has been appointed by Secretaries Hoover and Kellogg as Federal Commissioner to the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition commemorating the 150th anniversary of American Independence and which will be held in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1. Admiral Stickney will be in full charge of the United States Government exhibit, which will be the largest of its type ever made.

THIS IS THE PROPER WAY TO SHEAR A SHEEP

The pictures, with printed instructions illustrate and describe briefly a system of shearing sheep that has been developed by the thousands of professional shearers of America and Australia.

While slight modifications in the directing of the strokes taken with the shear are made by different shearers, the beginner should follow the instructions as closely as possible.



Set sheep up squarely on its rump, your feet close to the sheep's body. Grasp sheep firmly between knees. Have pedestal of the machine two feet to right and a little back. Begin at point of brisket, making strokes downward. In this position never allow sheep's head to fall back between your legs.

After shearing brisket, grasp sheep's right fore leg, pulling up well, at same time pressing in with left knee. This curves sheep's body to left in which position three or four strokes should be run down from under sheep's right fore leg to flank. These strokes open a starting place for strokes across belly.

The sheep's right foreleg is folded and held under your right knee, leaving sheep further back on its rump. Remove belly wool with strokes nearly straight around across belly. Hold shear loosely in the hand, with rear end well out from sheep's body to bring points of comb teeth down on sheep's skin. Make strokes carefully, with comb cutting full width. Be sure that teeth of comb are down on skin as stroke is ended, to overcome the necessity of making second cuts. Continue strokes across belly until all belly wool is removed, when it can be kept separate from fleece wool if desired.

When shearing inside of right hind leg is finished, roll sheep over a little on right hip and shear inside of left hind leg with strokes out towards foot. This completes crotching out.

The leg is kept straight by pressing in flank the same as is shown in picture No. 4. Now put sheep in position for shearing outside of left hind leg by moving feet back to allow sheep to be partly on its right side. In this position strokes can be run from left hind foot in to flank. After two or three of these strokes are taken, ending at flank, all later strokes should run in on leg then curve down, ending near back bone above tail base. Continue these strokes until left hind leg and hip are cleaned.

Sheep is now in position for opening up neck and is shown after a few strokes have been made. For this position, straighten sheep on its rump, at same time place right foot between sheep's hind legs. Turn sheep with foot a little more to the right. Press right knee firmly on sheep's brisket between fore legs, left foot and leg below knee being just in front of sheep's back bone. With left hand on sheep's jaw as shown, bend sheep's neck around left knee and open up neck with stroke from brisket to jaw and one or two strokes on right side of sheep's neck. Sheep's head is rolled up as shearing proceeds to turn neck so shearing can continue on to left side of sheep's neck. As left side of neck is sheared, continue strokes on up to shear left jaw, side of face and top of head, grasping left ear as top of head is being sheared.

Shear left shoulder and fore leg in position shown in this picture. Shearer has not moved feet and only moved sheep by straightening it up into a little more upright position. All strokes in shearing shoulder should be run towards back, but not entirely to back bone, each one ending with comb teeth well down on skin.

Here the sheep is in position for shearing left side. With right foot still between sheep's hind legs, grasp sheep's left fore leg, move left foot forward and with right foot swing sheep more around to the right, at the same time laying the sheep down almost squarely on its back with its left fore leg pressed down against its head. Have your shoulder, left arm and right foot holding the sheep's body curved around left leg which tightens skin on sheep's left side, making it possible to shear side with long strokes from hip to shoulder. About half of the side can be shorn in this position then change should be made to position 8.

As this picture shows, the sheep has gradually been brought to a nearly upright position again as shoulder is being shorn. Sheep's head is lying down on its left side, which curves its body stretching skin tight where shearing is to be done. Shearer continues with strokes from near the back around across right side, with sheep in this position until wool is removed down side to right hind leg. As last stroke is being made on side shearer should raise sheep's head letting its body down on side.

In shearing the right hind leg, strokes should start near the back bone and run well out on leg.

The sheep is here shown as it is being finished. Shearer, if he wishes, can drop onto his right knee, but sheep's head should be held over against its right side, and hind leg kept straight by pressing hand in flank as shown. As mentioned before, hind leg should never be pulled out for shearing. If this is done the sheep will start to kick. With leg held straight as shown in this picture sheep cannot yank leg back against comb teeth.

Now the sheep is finished, note the unbroken blanket of wool and the smooth appearance of the sheep. No ridges, no gashes or cuts. By following this method you will always get the best results.

The Dry Victory

Michigan has given a clear-cut decision on the wet and dry question. The voters of the state have declined to become confused by any attempt to mix issues and their emphatic turndown of the so-called home rule amendment suggests that this shady device of the wets may have been the final straw that put the liquor business outside the pale.

The brewers and saloonkeepers have only themselves to blame for the fate that has overtaken them. Though the simon pure prohibition sentiment in Michigan has unquestionably been growing in recent years, there still is room for doubt whether it alone could have been strong enough to make the state dry.

But the stupidity and cupidity and lawlessness among the makers and sellers of intoxicants, the efforts of members of this class to rule in politics for the benefit of their special interests, the disdain of all things decent and honest which has prevailed in their ranks put a potent weapon against them into the hands of the prohibition workers.

The big dry vote, large even in Detroit though the city did go wet was rolled up with the aid of men who were not primarily opposed to the sale of liquor, who were not "dry" in their beliefs, who thought the question of abstention from liquor a personal matter. But these men were so thoroughly disgusted with conditions that they were willing and ready to do anything in order to destroy the vile type of saloon which has been cursing society, corrupting politics, harboring criminals, making life unsafe and ofttimes making living intolerable.

The question with them was no longer whether a man has a right to take a drink but whether a lawless and criminal element was to continue in control of the common wealth.

The liquor men had plenty of counsel to mend their ways. The passage of the Warner-Cramton law by the state legislature was an emphatic warning. It was notice to them to conduct their business decently and according to law, If the wet interests had taken heed, if their better element had insisted that the statute be honored both in letter and spirit, they might not have made themselves and their business forever secure but they would have delayed prohibition indefinitely.

Even at the end they might have saved themselves if instead of using for their weapon of counter attack that absolutely silly and thoroughly dishonest measure, the home rule amendment, they had fought fairly and in the open. But they seemed blinded and to the last they went on headlong, inviting their own destruction. There is no particular reason why anyone should feel sorry for them.—The Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Idea Of The Call To Youth

"There is only one thing that is mightier than armies and that thing is an idea whose time has come." —Victor Hugo.

The idea of the Call to youth is one "whose time has come" to the world. Fully fifty years ago the W. C. T. U. knew that "if you would write anything into the life of a nation you must write it into the minds of the children," and therefore laws requiring the teaching of the effects of alcohol on the human body were written upon the statute books of state and nation. Devoted, character building teachers instilled such laws into the minds of boys who later in state legislatures and then in the Congress, wrote state prohibition laws and the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

These safeguards of youth must be understood and appreciated by our young people, else they will fail of effect. By the same token they must be preserved by this same group for the youth of the next generation. The appeal of the W. C. T. U. for the training and safeguarding of our young people is not only to those of older years, but to the young people themselves to idealize life and visualize the true goal towards which life shall be set.

An oft heard cry of the age is "personal liberty." Every human being longs for utmost freedom of expression, but often mistakes just what that is.

In one of the rooms at Mount Vernon there hangs a large iron key. It is one of the keys of the Bastile and was presented to Geo, Washington by his friend, the Marquis de Lafayette. How appropriate the presentation of that key to Washington! He loved liberty and was willing to sacrifice or even die for it.

Bad habits and evil practices are the Bastiles into which the liberty of the people is locked today. The key that will open them is older than the one hanging on the Mount Vernon wall—"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Then Christ said, "I am the truth." Christ as the inspiration of life brings true liberty.

Liberty gained for oneself is a possession to be shared with the wider reach of the social group, the community life, the state and nation. The writing of the Eighteenth Amendment into the Constitution makes it possible to have liberty from enthrallment of habits that wreck and destroy life and blot out the fairness of vision we may have. It makes possible cleaner citizenship that will increase as the truth about alcohol is increasingly known.

But citizenship is not merely the right to vote. That is one of the duties of citizenship. All of life, personal, social and political, must reflect the basis of character.

It has been said that no nation rises higher than the average of its citizens. "To thine own self be true. Thou canst not then be false to any man."

So, whether it be social life, business activities, or the conduct of the nation, whether by activities as a private citizen or by office holding in any unit, the call of this age because of better opportunity and larger privileges, is insistent for better things. It is a challenge for clean living, lofty ideals and consistent public service.

The world-reach is intimate today. The United States touches. in its benevolence and philanthropy, the children of Central Europe and all life where there is disaster or need. The young people of the world are developing a world friendliness as they correspond with each other as part of their school activities. The nation, true to its own self, as the individual, must be in fine accord and helpfulness with all the world, thus making possible the upward and onward reach.

Loyalty to self implies loyalty to country, since we are every one responsible for the conduct of the government. "We the people—do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Organized evils today seek to tear down constituted authority and substitute selfish interest in its stead. With no regard for the rights of others, they make life difficult for those who wish to have it worth while. Such a situation ought to be a challenge to those who love the decencies of life.

The attacks upon the prohibition (as cover under which all law may be violated) merit the strongest opposition from young people who are the greatest recipients of its benefits. The call of this hour is for young men and young women to sign the total abstinence pledge, thus defining their personal attitude on the question, and to set the standard, in their social touch, for reverence and honor for the law, and then, as citizens, do their utmost to secure its enforcement.—National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.

Death Of Earl Dewey Reynolds

Judge E. D. Reynolds of Rockford, Illinois, passed away at his home Monday May 3rd, after a short illness from influenza. Judge Reynolds will be remembered by many of our citizens as a former superintendent of the North Adams High school. Earl D. Reynolds was born on a farm near Waldron and after attending country schools began work at Hillsdale College. He was afterward superintendent of North Adams schools and will be long cherished by most of his former pupils as a strict disciplinarian but kindly friend. He inaugurated methods of teaching which proved their worth in after years.

He entered the Law Department at Ann Arbor University from which he later graduated, thence he went to Rockford Illinois to begin a career, which proved highly successful. Naturally drifting into politics, not so much for personal aggrandizement as to purify them, he became Representative to the Illinois State Legislature from his district, also Assistant Attorney General of the state.

For the past three years he had been Judge of the Winnebago Circuit Court, a man deserving the emoluments and honors of an office with responsibilites higher up and above his colleagues and very highly respected by all who knew him. His brother Hon. Rush Reynolds of Waldron served as Representative in Lansing from this district. Judge Reynolds was happily married and the father of five children all of whom with the widow survive. His children followed in the footsteps of their notable father and have been students at Hillsdale College.

Those who were fortunate enough to have been associated with Judge Reynolds either as fellow citizens, pupils or workers, have nothing but the highest possible regards for his nobility of character. As a teacher he stood for uprightness, morality and patriotism. as a lawyer he maintained the profession far above the common ideals, and as a christian gentleman he was noted for the elements of right living and dignified courtesy extended to all persons, no matter of what standing in life.

Verily his works do live after him.

Among others who have passed to positions of responsibilty and prominence after being under his training might be mentioned Dennis Clancy Representative of the Third District of Michigan in the state legislature; John W. Payne School Commissioner of Crawford County; Judd M. Schaad, Superintendent of Schools, Chicago, Ill. James Post, auctioneer; Dwight Blackmer, editor of the Memphis Bee Macomb county; Dr. Eugene Smith, city veterinary Seattle Washington; Maude B. Corbett, National Secretary Y. W. C. A., Mildred Corbett, of National Y. W. C. A., New York City; Bert T. Morehouse, optician Sterling Illinois; Harry Barnes traveling salesman Chicago; S. Easton Driscoll, real estate dealer Ypsilanti Michigan.

Funeral services were held at Rockford on Tuesday and were attended by the following from this vicinity; Mrs. O. J. Gleason of Waldron, President Emeritus Mauck of Hillsdale College and Mrs. R. W. Reynolds.

HIGHWAY LIGHTING IS A STEPPING STONE TO ELECTRICITY ON THE FARM

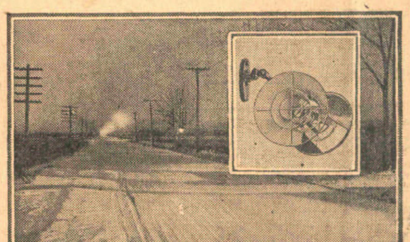
With Poles and Wires Set Up Along Roads, It Should Not Be Expensive or Difficult for Power Companies to Run Wires to Farm Houses Along Route.

Power companies want to serve the farmer. There are thousands so remote, however, that the companies cannot afford to install the necessary transmission system and neither can these farmers afford to have the work done, says W. L. Harraden of the General Electric Company.

Some farmers are more fortunate, however, because they live along roads that within the past few years have become main highways, or at least well-traveled thoroughfares. These roads now have as many automobiles on them at night as do some city streets, and are therefore being illuminated. This means that the poles and wires will be set up, and the farmers will not have to pay for this expense. The power company can afford to run wires from these poles to the farm buildings.

"Highway lighting goes hand in hand with the extension of rural lines," says Mr. Harraden. "The assurance of a rural lighting load, with its annual revenue a certainty, makes is feasible to extend lines where the farm load itself would not warrant the investment. Thus highway lighting helps to extend electric service to the farmer as well as help him in transporting his produce to market.

"It is estimated that much farm produce never reaches a market. Overcrowded roads, with resultant delays in transportation, are a contributory cause to this loss. Adequate illumination of highways at night, eliminating headlight glare and reducing the danger of accidents, makes it feasible to carry on truck transportation at night, with a consequent relief in traffic conditions during the day. Furthermore, perishable foodstuffs may be moved to city markets between midnight and dawn, and delivered fresh at the opening of the day.



An incandescent lamp in a new type three-in-one reflector developed by the General Electric Company makes country roads at night almost as bright as day at little expense. Insert—a close up of the reflector.

As an example of the way in which highway illumination assists in the movement of farm products to markets, there is the lighting of Hylan Boulevard, across Staten Island, N. Y. This highway is used extensively every night for taking produce and other farm products into New York City from New Jersey by automobile trucks. It is customary to ferry from Perth Amboy to Tottenville, proceed along Hylan Boulevard across Staten Island, and ferry from St. James to Brooklyn or New York, thereby eliminating the congested traffic along New Jersey and in New York City. Much of the traffic is at night, so that the produce arrives at the markets early in the morning. Hylan Boulevard is now the best lighted rural highway in the United States."

WOMAN COULD NOT SLEEP

Her Mother-in-Law Knew A Remedy

Mrs. Belle Thompson was in a very weak and run-down condition for four years. She had great difficulty in getting to sleep at night and even then did not sleep soundly. She would wake up again and again. Besides this her appetite was poor. "My mother-in-law told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash," she writes. "I took six bottles of the Vegetable Compound and I was not the same woman at all. I could sleep and would get up in the morning singing and feeling fine. I am the mother of three children and always after the babies came I had to take treatments, but I can truly say that this last time I have only used the Sanative Wash. It does me more good than the treatments. It keeps me on my feet to care for my children and I do most of my work. I feel it my duty to let you know how both of the medicines have helped me."—MRS. BELLE THOMPSON, R. 2, Rossville, Georgia.

Tel Aviv Lively New Town

Tel Aviv, the new Jewish city in Palestine, is shipping vegetables to the Vienna market. The experiment is being tried by Jews who formerly lived in Vienna and emigrated to Palestine to tempt fortune. The first shipment was of cauliflower, with the leaves all removed in order to economize in weight. Viennese rapidly bought up the first lot. It is calculated that vegetables can be brought from Palestine at one-quarter the cost of local hothouse products. Oranges are being brought from Jaffa. They compete with Italian oranges, not alone because of the unwillingness of the Austrians to buy Italian products, but because the Jaffa oranges are excellent.

Strawberries enough to supply a family for a season can be grown in a barrel. This has been demonstrated by a Californian, Delevan D. Johnson, says the Popular Science Monthly. CHAPTER XVI

For two days the watchers of the trail waited in their ambush, but no hunters or search party left the post. Then, one morning, at daylight, from the thick scrub of the shore south of Ogoke, two men looked long through binoculars at the chimneys of the snow-blanketed cabins, and smiled into each other's wind-burned faces when they saw that from more than half there rose no smoke of cooking fires. Of the group of tipis of bush Indians which had dotted the clearing in October, but two now remained.

It was the turn of the old Ojibway and two young Indians to stand guard on the trail to the game country. Michel and Steel were too far to the south to overtake Laflamme's men, so they struck straight back to camp, confident of the outcome—for old Wagosh guarded the trail.

That morning, as the stars faded and dawn broke blue and bitter over the eastern ridges, an old man with hate in his heart prayed for the coming of one for whom he had waited long. With hoods pulled over frost-blackened faces from which rose the steaming columns of their breath, Wagosh and his two companions shuffled back and forth on their snowshoes, beating their shoulders with mittened hands, for the stinging cold pierced their caribou capotes.

"It may not be that he will come today," said the old Indian in his native tongue, "but if a Frenchman, short, with legs that curve like a bow, comes with others, they pass and we follow, until they separate to hunt. Then you will take the others, while I follow him alone—for he is mine. Wagosh, the fox, will know what to do."

The Indians nodded. They had heard his story.

But this morning the watchers of the trail had not long to wait. As the lifting sun filtered through the forest, stabbing the blue shadows with lances of light, Wagosh suddenly stopped the whispered conversation with:

"Bisan! shish!"

Crouched in a thicket of young fir, their guns stripped of their skin cases, the three stiffened, listening. Presently to their straining ears drifted the faint click of snowshoes. Pushing aside some low branches the Ojibway peered down the trail in the direction of the sound. After a space of breathless waiting, his companions saw his arm tremble. Then, shivering like a man chilled to the bone, the old Indian turned a face fierce with passion, and whispered:

"Let them pass. He has come!"

Swinging rapidly up the trail moved the stocky figure of Black Baptiste followed by an Indian whose eyes shifted furtively to right and left as he walked. When the two had passed from sight, three shapes, leaving the trail, followed like shadows, on muffled shoes. Two miles beyond, where the fresh tracks of a moose crossed the path in the snow, and the hunters from Ogoke separated, Wagosh left his friends, to pick up the webbed imprints of the larger shoes of his man.

Then two still hunts started through the soundless forest—the stalk of moose, and of man. Over the new snow, as swift and as noiseless as a wolf after ptarmigan, the hunter of Black Baptiste closed in. Evidently in doubt of the direction of the movement of the air, the Frenchman stopped to test it with his bare hand. Then he went on, until the sudden lengthening of the stride in the snow indicated that the moose had scented danger and started to travel.

With a curse the hunter lifted both shoulders in a gesture of defeat. The shifting air had betrayed him. He turned from the trail he had followed and struck out in a new direction. Shortly, as he stopped and knelt on a knee to tighten the thongs of a shoe, a voice straightened him to his feet with a jerk, nervously fingering the trigger of his gun. His shifting eyes searched the inscrutable spruce that walled him in. Trapped, helpless, he flinched from the expected flash of the hidden rifle.

"Drop the gun!"

"Marche!" The command snapped on the frosty air like a whiplash.

Slowly the henchman of Laflamme obeyed the order of his concealed enemy. Then a crouching figure, with half-raised rifle, stole from a clump of young growth and followed.

A hundred feet from the gun, Baptiste, shaking with fear and rage, turned desperately on his captor. "What do you want?" he demanded in Ojibway.

The black eyes of Wagosh blazed with exultation. The lean face in the hood was pitiless. At last he looked into the face of his man.

"You know me—Wagosh—from Woman river?" He bit off the words as a drill bites steel.

The swart features of Black Baptiste went yellow at the words. He remembered the father of the girl at his cabin.

Stiff with fear, his staring eyes watched the black muzzle of the moving death slowly sighted on his heart. Then, as his nerves snapped and he leaped in desperation toward the crouched figure, there was a loud explosion. With a groan the Ojibway crumpled to the snow.

The dazed Frenchman, stopped short in his rush, rocked on his feet—then stumbled forward, grasping his knife. As he hurled himself, with a downward slash, on the heap in the snow, he met an upward thrust which buried the blade of Wagosh in his body.

Then on the white floor of the forest, a man blinded by flame and powder, and one mortally hurt struck and slashed until strength left their arms and they lay together, hunter and hunted, motionless, on the crimsoned snow.

There Steele and Michel found them.

"Knife fight!" cried the Iroquois. "What happen to Wagosh gun?" He picked up the cheap trade-gun with its burst breech. "Ah-hah! He get snow een de muzzle an' she bust w'en he shoot."

"Too bad, poor old man! He could have shot Baptiste at the ambush, but he wanted to settle it alone—tell him who he was, I suppose."

"Yes, he mak' dis feller drop hees gun—den he stop heem for to talk," said Michel, examining the trail of Baptiste. "W'en Wagosh shoot an' de gun bust, de Frenchman jump on heem wid de knife."

Michel gently turned over the frozen body of the old Indian, exposing the face, powder-burned and torn, beyond recognition.

"By gar! He fight heem widout hees eyes!"

"Brave old Wagosh!" Steele looked, and turned away, sick at heart. He had liked the simple-hearted Ojibway.

"I tell you dat eet was all right. Old Wagosh watch de trail."

"Yes, the trail was safe with Wagosh. Now he can rest in peace. He did what he came to do."

And the two returned to their camp and sent a sled to bring in the body to be cached under logs until spring, when it could be buried.

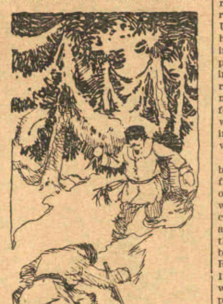
Robbed of the joy and solace of her beloved violin; too restless to read, Denise St. Onge sat one evening with her father, her head resting on the back of her chair, her eyes closed.



The Dazed Frenchman Stopped Short In His Rush.

For a half hour the factor had brooded over his future, oblivious of her presence. Then, suddenly aware of her silence, he glanced curiously at the girl's averted face.

From the closed eyes tears traced their way down her cheeks while the sensitive mouth quivered with the misery of her thoughts.

"Denise! You poor child!"

"You must not mind foolish tears," she said. "I miss my violin so."

He shook his head at the subterfuge, then voiced the course of his thoughts. "If only they win at Ogoke and rid the country of that scoundrel, this will be a strong post. He will not dare to close it—I will defy him to. Steele has told them in Montreal."

"Yes, but what of me?" she groaned. "I have given him my promise."

The face of St. Onge flushed with passion. "The day you married that man I would shoot him and then myself."

She went to the factor and sitting on the arm of his chair, stroked his bowed head. "No, no; not that, not that, dear," she soothed. "I am not worth it."

He suddenly straightened, and asked: "You will show me that letter?"

"Yes, if you wish it." Denise took an envelope from her desk and handed it to her father, who opened the letter and read:

"Mademoiselle St. Onge:

"You may be interested to know that the American, Monsieur Steele, honored us with his presence on his way home to Nepigon in October. As he was drowned in the Jackfish rapids, I am at liberty to say that I found him irresistible and was preparing to accompany him to the railroad, when Monsieur Laflamme surprised us in his cabin. Rose Bernard."

Rising, the factor faced the girl, the hand holding the letter shaking from his emotion.

"Why not? He admitted that Laflamme surprised them," she answered in a strained voice, avoiding her father's eyes. "What does it matter now? I have given my word."

"Will you tell me this?" he demanded. "You loved this man when he left for home in September? I know, for you were happy."

Her black eyes met his bravely. "When he left here I believed in a beautiful thing—but that, somehow, has died."

"If it died," he answered, "why, when you thought him dead, did you cry night after night—I heard you in your room; I knew from your playing—why was the shock—the joy, so great when he returned to fight for us?"

She did not answer.

"I believe you love him still, in spite of what you say. He has loved you from the first; I could see it. He is sacrificing much for us—proving his love for you every day, and yet you allow this lie of a low woman to poison your mind."

With a gesture of hopelessness, she rose to leave the room, avoiding his eyes.

"I do not know if they can save the post," said St. Onge. "I may have to leave the company—a ruined man. But I tell you this, that the woman who throws away the love of Monsieur Steele will live to be haunted by regret."

She turned a white face at the door, as she said: "You forget that I have given Monsieur Lascelles my promise."

* * * * * * *

It was a "poudre day" at Ogoke. In the gray dawn a tall figure had left the scrub of the shore, miles below and out of sight of the post, to examine the trail on the lake ice, which led south to the Rouge and the Jackfish. Michel had smiled with satisfaction to find that a sled had passed since the fall of snow two nights before. The mystery which ringed the doomed post, as the forest rings a clearing, was doing its work. Unnerved by the fate of those who had gone downriver and into the hunting country, never to return, the people were slipping away from Ogoke in the night as from a spot plague-ridden. The day of Laflamme was nearing its sunset. There could be few left, now, to drink his whisky. He was finished. The moment for walking in on the trader and Big Antoine was at hand.

As he backtracked to the camp, the bold features of the Iroquois, in his fur hood, lit with joy as he gloated over the victory they had won—won with the toil and sweat of two months' ceaseless effort. He smacked his lips at the thought of meeting Laflamme—the man who had murdered in cold blood—planned the ruin of Wailing River—who had dared insult Denise. It would be a sweet moment, that, when he looked into the faces of the pair of cutthroats, Laflamme and Big Antoine.

He swung along over his backtracks, his snowshoes raising the powdery snow like dust, engrossed in plans for the future. As he entered some timber, thick with young growth, a rifle flashed on his flank! The man in the trail took a step forward—swayed, as his gun slipped from his hands—then lunged headlong to the snow and lay motionless.

For a space, in the windless morning, the forest was without sound. Then a chickadee called, and curious, sailed down to inspect the still shape in the trail. Presently a moose-bird croaked. Again silence shut in.

After an interval there was a movement in the thicket of young spruce. Branches were parted, to make way for a swart face from which sinister eyes gloated on the stricken thing in the snow.

Gun thrust forward, hammer cocked, the assassin cautiously left his ambush. Standing over the still body, face down, with a knee curiously bent under, he laughed in triumph, as he kicked viciously with the toe of his snowshoe at the back of the hooded head. But at the movement, the lifted foot in its snowshoe was gripped and held, while the head and shoulders of the man at his feet lunged into his legs, carrying him with a cry of surprise backward to the snow.

Hampered by the shoes which trapped and anchored their feet, the two fought; one, desperately for his life; the other, for the settlement of old scores—and this shot from the spruce. But the strength and fury of the raw-boned Iroquois soon wore down the man beneath him who frantically strained and twisted to break the grip on his throat.

Mythical Greek Hero

In Greek mythology Adonis was a beautiful young boy, beloved by Venus and Proserpine. They quarreled about his possession, but the dispute was settled by Jupiter, who decreed that Adonis should annually spend eight months with Venus in the upper world and four months with Proserpine in the lower world. Adonis was fatally wounded by a wild boar, during the chase, and was changed by Venus into an anemone. She yearly mourned him on the anniversary of his death. Shakespeare has commemorated the love of Venus for Adonis in a long descriptive poem entitled "Venus and Adonis."—Kansas City Times.

Devices for Foiling Festive Holdup Man

While it may be impossible to prevent a visit from the holdup man there's no need for a merchant to give up a big sum of money simply because he demands it, says the Progressive Grocer.

In the first place, all the money possible should be banked late in the afternoon. If the bank closes at four o'clock everything should be cleaned up and banked by that time. If the bank keeps open until six o'clock or nine o'clock so much the better, for merchants should see that their cash registers or money drawers do not get too full. Along about the time the crowd begins thinning out, and before stragglers start coming in, the bulk of the money, the big bills, most of the fives and all those of larger denominations, are taken from the place where the money is kept and change is made. This money should be hidden away without even the clerks knowing where it is put.

One suggestion made by a detective is that one of the keys of the cash register be wired in such a way that, when it is pushed, the signal of distress is given.

There are more than 100,000 people employed in the pearl fisheries of the world.

POULTRY

FEEDING TURKEYS IMPORTANT PHASE

(Prepared by the United States Departmen of Agriculture.)

Feeding the young birds is one of the most important phases of turkey raising. Unwholesome feeds and improper methods of feeding, especially in the case of turkeys closely confined have resulted in many failures.

For the first two days after hatching the poults require no feed, access to clean drinking water and a little coarse sand and green feed to peck at being sufficient. Beginning with the third day they should be fed, the amount given them varying with the quantity of natural feed they are able to pick up outside the coop. It is best to keep them more or less hungry.

When the range provides an abundance of green feed and insects, the growing poults require but little extra feeding. More losses are attributable to overfeeding, perhaps, than to all other causes. One harmful effect of overfeeding is that it removes the necessity for hunting food, with the result that little exercise is taken and indigestion develops. Sanitary feeding places are also very important and, above all, the soil should be kept sweet and clean.

When natural feed is scarce or when the poults have to be kept from ranging outside, it is advisable to feed them about five times a day. If allowed to run outside the coop where they can find insects, seeds, and green feed, two or three feedings a day will be enough. If the poults are fed regularly every night, in a short time they will return nightly to their proper roosting quarters. Never allow the feed to become moldy. A good plan is to feed the poults on boards, cleaning off any feed that may remain after feeding, and standing the boards in the sun to dry.

Buttermilk has been found very beneficial in bringing poults successfully through the early stages. A good practice is to keep the milk in front of the young birds during the morning and water during the afternoon. If grit and green feed cannot be picked up outside the coop, they must be provided in some other way.

Loss on Bad Eggs

The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that the total loss of eggs in the United States each year due to spoilage, breakage and inefficient handling from the time the egg is produced on the farm until it reaches the consumer is $45,000,000. In the final analysis this loss is a farm loss, since a smaller price is paid for eggs to provide for the poor and broken eggs that go to the consumer.

Baby Chick Is Stupid

In addition to grain, mash and water, birds need some grit to help grind their food. Crushed stone, oyster shell or coarsely ground dry bone will serve the purpose. Such things should always be kept before the fowls in proper boxes. Since the birds have no teeth, these substances must be provided to help prepare the food for digestion.

Leghorns Economical Layers

Recent figures released by the Michigan State Poultry Improvement association, and obtained from the International Egg Laying Contest, show that the Leghorns are the most economical layers. The cost of Leghorn eggs was 14 cents per dozen; the Rocks came next with a cost of 21 cents per dozen.

Poultry Facts

Don't feed too much at a time.

* * *

More chickens are killed by feeding too soon than by starving.

* * *

Feed five times a day for first two weeks.

* * *

There are several good methods. Use one.

* * *

Keep rats, skunks, etc., away from chicks.

* * *

The cause of so many ducklings dying is the way they are fed.

* * *

Chicks must have greens, grit, grubs, grain, gumption, ground, and direct sunlight.

* * *

Keeping small sized hens is folly. There isn't any too much meat on chicken bones, anyway.

* * *

Cabbage is rich in the green material needed for laying hens. About six pounds of cabbage may be fed per 100 birds per day.

* * *

Early hatched chicks can be most easily obtained by using a reliable incubator.

* * *

Watch your layers and don't feed the slacker hen. It is always time to cull when the indications call for it.

* * *

More than 250 chicks in one brood is an expensive and harmful risk to take by anyone who has a desire to produce a lot with small equipment. As the chicks grow, give them more space. Chicks of different sizes and ages do better with their own classes.

* * *

Of dirty eaters, the hen leads all. Carrion, spoiled foods, moldy canned fruit, or excrement of any kind should not be left where hens on free range can get at it, for it taints the eggs.

* * *

Watch out for dead, flattened chicks in the brood coops, and remove all such litter for health's sake. If lice are found dose the chicks and premises with one part sodium fluoride and three or four parts fine ashes. If there are mites present, spray with one part crude oil and two parts kerosene.

It was Joseph Leidy of Philadelphia who studied the flora of his own doorstep, but a celebrated American glove maker could furnish a parallel to that illustrious example. The hobby of this manufacturer is the collection of diatoms. One of his friends in business in the same city, gathered specimens at the curbstone of the store where the gloves were sold and sent them as a present to the delighted specialist.

The Dirigible balloon has finally proved its worth as a vehicle for explorers over the frozen North Polar regions. The captain claims he sailed over the Pole but of course he came back without any proof but his story. Conditions up there on the axis of this earth must be entirely different from what they appeared to be. We remember the stories of different prognostigators and some were very fantastic. One writer claimed to believe there was a vast uncharted area, mostly land, upon which all kinds of animals roamed, etc., but the whole yarn has now gone up in smoke for it is settled the Polar region is simply a vast frozen mass of icebergs uninhabited by even the hardy Esquimaux.

Mr. Morehouse joined the Methodist church when a young man and ever remained faithful, taking an active part in church affairs being a member of the official board until his health failed.

He was a member of Adams Lodge No. 189, F. & A. M. since 1872 and a charter member of Alpha Chapter of O. E. S. For many years he had been a member of the cemetery trustees and it was largely through his efforts that the shrubbery and plants were placed there and lawn mowers used during the summers.

Funeral services were held at the late home Sunday afternoon May 9th at 2:30. Rev. Wylie of the Methodist church officiating assisted by Rev. Reiser of the Baptist church and interment was in the near-by cemetery under the auspices of the Masonic Fraternity. He is survived by one son Jay Morehouse of Highland Park one daughter Mrs. Alma Morehouse Allen, his youngest sister Mrs. Sarah Shults and many nephews and neices. He was a kind indulgent father and brother, and will be greatly missed in the home and vicinity.

W. C. T. U. Guest Day

The Annual Guest Day held at the Methodist parsonage on Tuesday afternoon was a pleasant occasion. Timely temperance topics were given in response to roll call and following the business meeting an interesting program was enjoyed by all. Rev. Wylie brought us an exceptionally good report of the Anti-Saloon League convention just held in Detroit, emphasizing two points; that conditions are much better in every way than in pre-prohibition days and that now as never before dry workers must unite and work to hold what has been gained. He paid high tribute to the W. C. T. U. which meant he said, "Women'll C. To U." The Farm Bureau Campaign

The Farm Bureau campaign in this county is going along nicely in most of the townships. We are meeting with splendid co-operation where the people have attended the rally meetings and are getting the real meaning of the big souled farm organization.

How are the big farm problems of legislation marketing and transportation to be solved, if not by a strong organization like the Farm Bureau?

It can't be done by kicking,
One man can't do it alone
It can't be done by waiting
It can't be done by hating
It can't be done by proxy

Organized farmers must think on these questions then. Organized farmers must work out the answers.

We must work with a neighborly spirit.

We must stick to the job.

As one of our leading bankers used to say "It is the only farm organization that has reached the ear of the government."

LIVES ON FARM IN OKLAHOMA

Happy Woman Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a houseful of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her failing health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and timid.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. R. 6, Box 396, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says: 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

Other women who have to work hard and keep things going may find the road to better health as Mrs. Short did, through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ask your neighbor.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lowell—Distracted because of the last start in spring work on his large farm, Alfred Glaser, 50 years old, residing six miles north of here, shot and instantly killed himself.

Owosso—Rammed by the tongue of a wagon when a team of horses she was holding became frightened and ran away, Mrs. Nick Olejas, 26 years old, mother of six children, is in the Memorial Hospital here, believed to be fatally injured. The accident occurred while her husband was loading hogs.

Albion—In order to test the city ordinance that forbids the maintaining of junk yards within residential areas, City Manager Leon A. Sears has brought complaint against Stanley Demske, who has a junk business at 509 Austin avenue. Demske asked for a hearing and he was released without bail.

Flint—Sitting on a railroad track with his head in his hands probably will cost James Moran, 45 years old, his life. He was removed to a hospital where attendants said he had little chance to recover. The fact that Moran was sitting on the track near a curve prevented the engineer seeing him in time to stop the train.

Ionia—Although a 1,700 pound harrow passed over his body, Raymond Cochrun, small son of Ezra Cochrun a farmer, is not believed to have been injured fatally. The boy fell under the machine which had to be driven completely over his body before he could be released. Twelve stitches were taken in closing a wound on his head.

Traverse City—A parade led by the blossom queen to be selected by popular vote will open the annual three-day blossom festival of the Grand Traverse cherry region to be conducted here beginning May 28. One hundred floats, several bands and nearly 2,000 school children are expected to participate in the parade. Jay P. Smith is general chairman.

Monroe—About 700 crippled children were examined at the clinic sponsored by the Monroe Rotary club, held May 12 at the Masonic Temple. The work was done by Dr. Carl G. Bagley, orthopedic surgeon at the University hospital at Ann Arbor. He was assisted by physicians of this city and country, and Miss Alberta Chase, secretary of the society for crippled children.

Menominee—The cost of a new survey of the land involved is the cause of further dispute in the Michigan-Wisconsin boundary case. Wisconsin urges that the expense be borne equally by the two states. Attorney-General Daugherty states, however, that inasmuch as Wisconsin has won, it is up to her to survey her own territory and stand the whole expense.

Kalamazoo—Serious injury to herself and her son and the wrecking of her new automobile resulted from Mrs. Isaac Hoebeke's attempt to learn to drive. Losing control of the car as it swerved to the side of the street, Mrs. Hoebeke stepped on the accelerator, in the belief that she was applying the brakes and the machine crashed into a telephone pole which snapped off at the base and fell across the automobile.

East Lansing—In the presence of 16 of the oldest living alumni, 2,300 students and presidents of other Michigan colleges and normal schools, the 69th anniversary of the founding of Michigan's state college was celebrated in the college gym May 13. Charles W. Garfield, Grand Rapids, a graduate of the class of 1870, spoke on "looking both ways," telling of the early days when the college was little more than three buildings set in a tract of burned out land, with 62 students.

Flint—One of the first air meets to be held in the state will be in Flint, June 4, 5 and 6, under the auspices of the Flint Chamber of Commerce. The meet will be sanctioned by the National Aeronautic Association and any records made will be official. Commercial and military planes will compete for various purses to be offered as prizes, one of which includes a race to Flint from the home town or field of the pilot. It is also planned to furnish contestants with free gasoline and oil.

Port Huron—The Pere Marquette Railway has been made defendant in a suit for $2,500 brought in the St. Clair County Circuit Court by Edward P Gibbons for damage alleged done to his farm property, north of Blaine, in April, 1925. According to Gibbons declaration and to testimony given before Judge Law, sparks from a locomotive set fire to hay on the railroad right-of-way, the flames being communicated to hay on the Gibbons' farm. The farmhouses and barns burned to the ground.

Lansing—At the governor's instance the state administrative board has authorized the building of a new $90,000 structure to house agriculture displays on the state fair grounds. The state auditor's records show that there is only about $21,000 in the fund out of which the new building expense is to be met and that no additonal monies for the fund are in sight until the next fiscal year appropriation, which is principally for state fair premiums, is received, unless the operation of the fair this fall shows a profit.

Battle Creek—Announcement has been made that Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Kellogg have deeded their lakeside estate on the north side of Gull Lake to the city of Battle Creek, together with a $300,000 endowment, placed in a trust fund to care for its perpetual maintenance. Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg retain a lifetime lease. They will, however, provide special occasions when the property shall be open to the public and a $25,000 pipe organ has been so arranged in the 18-room house that it may be used for lawn recitals.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Strike Is Ended—North Pole Reached Twice by Air Route.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN'S general strike came to an end as suddenly as it began. Nominally the government won in the struggle with the Trades Union congress, for officially the strike was called off without conditions. But the organ of the Laborites announced that the Trades Union congress took this action "having reached the conclusion as a result of a number of conversations with Sir Herbert Samuel that a satisfactory basis of settlement in the mining industry can now be formulated."

In calling off the strike the Trades Union congress ordered the men not to return to work until instructed by their individual unions. This caused considerable delay in the resumption of work, for many of the unions were disposed to take advantage of the situation to exact better terms of employment. Some employers said they would not take back the strikers until they had torn up their union cards.

Prime Minister Baldwin's statement to the house of commons was:

"The Trades Union congress came to see me this morning and told me they had decided to call off the general strike forthwith. I said there would be an immediate effort by myself and my colleagues to bring a resumption of negotiations between the two parties in the mining dispute with a view to securing the earliest possible settlement. It is of the utmost importance that in a moment like this the whole British people do not look backward, but forward. We will resume our work in a spirit of co-operation, putting behind us all malice and all vindictiveness."

The understanding reached by Sir Herbert Samuel, chairman of the royal coal commission, and Chairman Arthur Pugh of the Trades Union congress was that the coal strike negotiations should be resumed, the government temporarily continuing the subsidy; that a national wage board should be established, the men being protected against unnecessary wage reductions and their jobs and welfare being safeguarded by various conditions. The miners' federation, however, did not approve of these terms and issued a manifesto rejecting them, pointing out that the proposals implied a reduction of wages to a large number of miners. Practically, the whole controversy now is where it was.

Much credit for bringing about the end of the general strike is given the archbishop of Canterbury, who proposed a plan of conciliation that was adopted by the Liberal party and approved by public opinion. The government realized that the public did not like the idea of a fight to a finish and unofficially aided the negotiations between Sir Herbert Samuel and Arthur Pugh.

The firmness with which the government combated the general strike and the way in which the British people supported its measures lead to the prediction that it will be a long time before labor again tries this weapon in the United Kingdom. Legal authorities there declared the general strike was illegal and that those inciting it or participating in it were not protected by the laws regulating the trades unions. One of the most effective steps taken by the government was the stoppage of delivery of financial contributions to the strikers from other countries.

TWICE last week the North pole was reached by the air route. First, Lieut. Commander Richard E. Byrd of the United States navy, with Floyd Bennett as his mechanician, flew from Kings Bay, Spitzbergen, to the pole in a giant Fokker plane. He saw no land near there and but one patch of open water, so he circled the pole three times and returned to the starting point without landing. That he did reach the top of the world was assured by his observations with especially devised apparatus. His achievement was accepted generally, though in some countries, notably Italy, it was declared still doubtful. At the spot where Byrd located the pole he dropped an American flag and an account of the flight, in a box.

Three days later Capt. Roald Amundsen, who had warmly congratulated Byrd on his success, started from Kings Bay in the huge dirigible Norge, directing his flight to Alaska. Early next morning his wireless messages said he had just passed over the pole, and 44 hours and 35 minutes after the departure the Norge reached Point Barrow, Alaska, headed for Nome. The radio dispatches from the airship said that when the pole was reached the Norge circled around the spot several times and the Norwegian, American and Italian flags were dropped, being so placed that they remained upright on the field of ice. America shares in the glory of Amundsen's feat, for his companion and financial backer is Lincoln Ellsworth. The Norge was built in Italy for the Italian navy and was commanded on the polar flight by Colonel Nobile of Italy.

At Point Barrow is the Detroit Arctic expedition headed by Capt. George Hubert Wilkins. At last accounts its start toward the pole was still delayed by foggy weather.

POLAND, never in all history able to govern itself peaceably, was in the throes of a revolution last week. Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, who has been in opposition to the government since 1923, when he was eliminated by Premier Witos from the army, was at the head of the revolt, presumably being led to this step by the return of Witos to power and the appointment of Malczewski, one of Pilsudski's chief enemies, as minister of war. Several of the marshal's favorite regiments mutinied and marched on Warsaw, and at the time of writing they had possession of the city and were bombarding the Belvedere castle, to which President Wojciechowski and members of the Witos government had retreated. General Sikorski, former premier, was reported to have arrived at the capital with loyal troops and was fighting with the Pilsudski forces. The revolting marshal issued an ultimatum demanding the immediate resignation of Witos. Though a considerable part of the army and many provinces supported Pilsudski, the forces opposing him were so powerful that his ultimate success was doubtful.

GERMANY had her own troubles. The police discovered detailed plans for the establishment of a fascist dictatorship to be followed, presumably, by the restoration of the Hohenzollern dynasty to the throne. Raids were made on the residences and offices of the leaders and suppressed five Fascisti "athletic" societies, said to be military organizations with a membership of 50,000. The police admitted they did not have evidence warranting arrests, but the names of several industrial magnates and well-known royalists were dragged into the plot. In the home of Judge Class, chief of the pan-Germans, numerous letters from the former kaiser were confiscated, as well as the draft of a constitution to be proclaimed in case President von Hindenburg resigned and the Fascisti succeeded in seizing control of the army, which was to be rebuilt under protection of martial law.

Meanwhile Chancellor Luther was being forced to resign as the result of a personal defeat in the reichstag. A motion of censure proposed by the Democrats was adopted by a vote of 176 to 146. The Nationalists to the number of 103 refrained from voting. The chancellor's resignation was accepted but President von Hindenburg asked the rest of the cabinet to function until a new government could be formed. Luther's opponents accomplished his downfall by taking advantage of his insistence that the merchant flag, composed of the old monarchical colors, should be flown beside the republican flag on German embassies and consulates abroad. The Democrats, Socialists and Communists formed a combination against him. His friends blame the Nationalists for permitting his humiliating defeat.

PROSPER POULLET'S cabinet in Belgium resigned and King Albert asked M. Brunet, Socialist president of the chamber of deputies, to form a ministry solely for the purpose of solving the country's financial problems. Brunet was unable to get a ministry together.

BY VOTE of 69 to 13 the senate passed the Watson-Parker railway labor act exactly as it was adopted by the house last March. This measure puts out of existence the present federal railway labor board. It provides that railroads and their employees shall try to adjust differences by conference, and creates a board of mediation and conciliation to handle disputes that are not so settled. If the efforts of this board fail, provision is made for voluntary arbitration. In the event arbitration is not resorted to and a strike is threatened, the President may appoint an emergency board which will investigate and report within 30 days. During that time, and for 30 days thereafter, the parties, under the bill, agree not to change the conditions out of which the dispute grew and this has been construed as a promise on the part of the employees not to strike in that period.

IN THE effort to gain enough supporters to pass the Haugen farm relief bill, the leading advocates of that measure announced proposed amendments under which the $375,000,000 revolving fund would be reduced to $175,000,000 for stabilization of cotton prices, $75,000,000 for similar operations in corn, wheat, cattle, swine and butter, and $25,000,000 for miscellaneous crops.

Another major amendment would make the equalization fee feature effective at once on all basic commodities except cotton, where it would be deferred for two years. A third would eliminate from the bill authority for the President to declare an embargo on the importation of farm products during an emergency. The federal farm board would be prohibited from declaring an emergency in any commodity until interested farm organizations have asked it by a referendum of their membership under a fourth amendment.

Backers of the Curtiss-Aswell and Tincher bills got together and began to frame a compromise measure with which they hoped to kill the Haugen bill.

ANOTHER big advance in the air mail was made Wednesday when twelve-hour service between Chicago and Dallas, Texas, and twenty-four-hour service between New York and the Southwest, by way of Chicago, became realities. A northern branch of the service connecting Chicago and Minneapolis will be opened June 7.

CHINA'S new premier, Dr. W. W. Yen, has inaugurated a rengency cabinet composed mostly of men of foreign training. Alfred Sze, former minister to Washington, is foreign minister and Wellington Koo is minister of finance. This cabinet has the backing of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, but Marshal Chang, the Manchurian, remains silent. Americans in China were embarrassed when it was learned that Wu's troops had captured more than 10,000 rifles with ammunition, made in America and bearing the seal of the Russian imperial government with date of 1917. It is thought the soviets may have been selling arms bought from the United States during the World war.

Soviet Engineers to Study American Plants

Montreal.—A commission of four hydroelectric engineers from the Soviet union will tour the American continent for three months in preparation for the construction, on the Dnieper river in the Ukraine, of the largest hydroelectric development in Europe, gathering technical material. They will study the largest Canadian and American power plants from coast to coast.

The Dnieper project, which is a link in the huge superpower development planned by the Soviet government and includes large inland navigation and irrigation plans as well, will cost $75,000,000. The power plant will have an initial capacity of 210,000 kilowatts and an ultimate capacity of 455,000 kilowatts.

The plant, on the rapids above Zaporozhye (formerly Alexandrovsk), will feed power to a good part of the southern mining district of the Soviet union, which furnishes 75 per cent of the coal mined in the country, 70 per cent of the iron and a large proportion of the manganese, as well as heavily developed chemical and dye industries. By means of the development the Black sea will be linked with the German canal system via the Dnieper.

The detail initial costs of the enterprise are as follows: Railroad development, $16,000,000; lock system, $21,000,000; power house, $27,000,000; electrical transmission, $9,000,000; developing Samara river, $2,000,000.

WASHED EGGS ARE BEST IN HATCHING

That the old-fashioned practice of regularly turning eggs that are being accumulated for setting apparently has very little effect upon the hatchability of the eggs has been demonstrated by experiments at South Dakota State college, according to G. L. Stevenson, head of the department of poultry husbandry. Experiments have also demonstrated the importance of using only clean eggs for hatching, and that even if clean eggs are used they should not be held more than ten or twelve days before being set.

These results were obtained in an experiment carried on for the first time last spring. The experiments were made to test out the old theory that the eggs saved to set had to be turned each day.

In the tests to determine how long eggs could be held for setting, Stevenson found that those not more than twelve days old hatched about equally well. Some eggs held even as long as eighteen days, hatched chicks, but in most cases those held longer than twelve days did not do well. In fact, the longer they were held past the twelve-day maximum, the lower the percentage recorded.

Professor Stevenson also tried the hatching quality of clean eggs, washed eggs and dirty eggs. The clean eggs hatched much better than the others. Washing the eggs seemed to fill the pores of the shell, thereby preventing air from entering. Slightly dirty eggs hatched fairly well, but those covered with manure or broken egg yolk were not in condition for air to penetrate through the shell and did not hatch well.

Feeding Cod Liver Oil to Quite Young Chicks

Cod liver oil may be fed to young chicks in the amount of 1 per cent of the mash, or one pint of oil to each 100 pounds of mash, and given until they are from four to six weeks of age, when, if they are out upon a grass range, they will not need it longer. It may be fed, however, as long as the poultryman desires. If you desire to mix the oil with the mash in small quantities, you can follow the Cornell rule, viz.: two teaspoonfuls of oil daily to each 100 chicks, increasing the amount by one teaspoonful each two weeks until four teaspoonfuls are given, and feeding it up to six or eight weeks. If large quantities of mash are to be prepared, the oil may be sprinkled or sprayed upon it while it is spread upon the floor. In small quantities, the oil may be mixed with a little of the mash by hand, and this may then be distributed through the entire amount that it is desired to use. As the oil loses something of its value upon standing, it is best not to prepare the mash for more than a few days ahead. The crude-pressed Norwegian product is best for this use.

Three Important Items in Production of Eggs

A good ration can do but three things—first, build up and replace worn-down tissues of the hen's body; second, furnish the body with heat and energy; and third, manufacture eggs.

No ration can make a hen lay that is naturally unfit or poorly developed for laying. Immature or sickly birds cannot be made to produce eggs by simply giving them an egg-producing ration. First of all, the body and health of the fowl must be in the proper condition. Then, with care and proper food, best results will be obtained; but good care and proper feeding will not make a naturally poor layer a high producer. This is a question of breeding and not one of feeding. These three things are of equal importance in the production of eggs—the breeding of the hen, ration of the hen, and the care of the hen. Two poultrymen may get entirely different results from the same flock and with the same ration. It is a question of their care and skill in feeding the birds and in keeping them comfortable and contented.

Fowls Need Grit

The baby chick is, at its best, a very stupid little thing and, if allowed to wander away from the brooder, will huddle up in a corner away from the heat. Some will then be smothered in their desire to crowd together and keep warm. A fence around the brooder will keep them close to the heat. One side of this may be opened to let them get at the mash hopper. Then when their feeding time is over, drive them in near the brooder and shut them in.

Use Ultra Violet Ray

The ultra violet ray, already employed profitably by medical men to heal human ills, is being used at the University of Wisconsin to produce "more and better" eggs and chickens. Nearly three times as many eggs can be produced by action of the ray, the departments of agricultural chemistry and poultry have found. Heavier shells in irradiated pens also increased marketability of eggs. The ultra violet light was found to cure fowls suffering from rickets.

Crate Feeding Favored

Crate feeding of poultry will add from 8 to 25 cents to the value of each chicken. In addition to adding a considerable amount of weight to the birds, it was found that crate feeding improves the quality, with the result that the chickens handled in such a manner will often bring a premium of 3 to 5 cents per pound. In trials it was found that the birds gained from 18 to 39 per cent of weight after 14 days of crate feeding averaging 30 per cent or 1.1 pounds.

Michigan Children's Aid Society

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of The Michigan Children's Aid Society was held Friday afternoon at the branch headquarters of the Society in Detroit.

Seven trustees were elected for a four year term, reports were submitted by the state officers, and representatives from every one of the ten branch officers read papers describing the year's work in their own particular section of the state.

The annual report submitted by Albert H. Stoneman, General Secretary and State Superintendent, covered the biggest year's work in the Society's history. A total of 4,166 children were rendered services of various kinds during the year. Of this number 1,759 were cared for in the Society's two Receiving Homes and in private boarding homes; 275 children were received for adoption; 522 children were supervised in trial adoption homes; and cases of 1,610 children were investigated who were not taken into care. A grand total of 10,928 supervisory visits were made on placed out children in 1926 and that meant also that a carefully written report of each visit, with comments and recommendations, had to be filed in each child's personal record.

The following were elected to fill vacancies in the Board of Trustees: Burton S. Gier, Lansing; Harlow A. Clark, Marquette; I. N. Bushong, Gladstone; C. E. Lawrence, Iron River; Mrs. O. C. Davidson, Iron Mountain; Miss Marie Comstock, Alpena; and William E. Cox, Grand Rapids. At a meeting of Trustees held later in the afternoon, the following officers were elected: Colonel Edwin S. George, of Detroit, President; Mark Merriman, of Jackson; Burton S. Gier, of Lansing, and Shirley Stewart, of Port Huron, Vice Presidents; Albert H. Stoneman, General Secretary and State Superintendent.

On recommendation of a committee, appointed some weeks ago to investigate the desirability of moving the State Headquarters to Detroit, it was voted to accept the committee's report and move the the offices to that city. Detroit was strongly urged as the logical place nearly four years ago when the Headquarters were moved from St Joseph to Lansing.

The suburb of River Rouge (Detroit) will appropriate $80,000 for Park improvements this season part of which has been already begun. The villages of Inkster, Fordson, Wayne and others adjoining will benefit largely by this effort. The south and west sides of Detroit are expected to exceed the speed limit the coming summer for both building and improvements Fordson has joined the city of Detroit and others will follow suit at once. The averge sojourner to Detroit who might not have been familiar with conditions there will undoubtedly wonder where the city begins or where it ends. Several suburbs which were way out in the country five years ago are now part of Detroit, and at present rate of growth Ypsilanti will before many years be only a suburb of the city.

Johnny Appleseed

We are celebrating this year the 150th anniversary of many stirring scenes and incidents of American history. One hundred and fifty years ago free government was being established in the Western world and many notable characters were walking across the pages of history whose daring deeds we are commemorating today. And so this year, while we are engaged in paying tribute to the heroes of 1776, it is also well to remember that it was this same year that marked the birth of an eccentric character who became known to the first settlers of the Northwest territory as Johnny Appleseed, pioneer orchardist of America. For over forty years this man devoted his time in wandering through the wilderness planting apple seeds for the benefit of future settlers and their descendants. To this man was due the splendid orchards that blossomed so full during the early part of the nineteenth century, when states like Michigan were in the making. Johnny Appleseed was not a war hero, his real name has been forgotten, but the service he rendered for mankind has survived the years and will not be overlooked by those who shared in the work that he gave to the nation. Trees are being planted this year in his honor for we have learned that he who plants a tree leaves a monument behind.

The Detroit surburb of Dearborn is expecting a big boom this summer. Gas mains are to be laid all over the town and work has been started on a big ward school building. A recently completed building was dedicated last week. Watch for the big boom this summer in all Detroit suburbs.

Michigan's only Inter-denominational Standard Training school for workers is announced this year by the Michigan Council of religious Education, to be held at Camp Warren near Benton Harbor July 5th to 16. Camp Warren has one thousand feet of Lake frontage on Lake Michigan and has plenty of buildings and cottages.

Marjorie Kuhn Again Free

The case of Marjorie Kuhn of Jonesville accused and convicted in Hillsdale courts of poisoning her paramour, which has been in the minds of the officers the past few days has been kicked out of court by Judge Chester as we anticipated. The jury on her case decided she was guilty and the Judge sentenced her to life imprisonment in 1923 but the Supreme court reversed the verdict and the case is nolle prossed. Beyond being a bad actor they find no cause for action in her case

Church Choirs To Sing At Farm Day

Michigan's best church choirs, recruited from the smaller towns and country districts of the state, will "sing it out" for state championships at M. S. C. on July 30, during the annual Summers Farmers' Day at the college.

Special cash prizes will be awarded from the R. E. Olds community music fund, grading down from a first award of one hundred dollars.

Entries will be limited to country churches and churches from towns of not more than 2,000 population, insuring a real "country" classification for the interesting contest. The event is being held in line with the plan of the college in developing community in the rural districts of the state.

Each choir must consist of at least six singers, and may have as many more than that as desired. Each group will sing two selections, one of which will be a specified religious song.

State Soils Shown In Need Of Lime

Most Michigan soils are in need of lime in order to correct acid condition in preparation for crop production, if the results of hundreds of tests made during the run of the recent M. S. C. soils fertility train hold good for all of the state.

The train covered many counties in southeastern Michigan and the "Thumb" district, and most of the soils tested during the trip were shown to need lime, ranging from one to three tons per acre. Several samples in the Saginaw valley showed no lime need, according to O. B. Price, soils specialist from the college who was with the train. In some of these instances farmers who had planned liming applications were saved considerable money as a result of the tests.

Proper soil treatment, with the soils test as a basis to provide necessary knowledge of exact soil condition, was the gospel of information spread by the special. More than 5,000 farmers attended the meetings held in connection with the train, while 1,470 soils samples were tested.

Lapeer held the record for number of soils brought to the railway laboratory for testing, 139 samples being examined at this stop. The Owosso meeting is reported by the college extension men as turning out the largest attendance.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

"Fruit trees thrive well here though they are yet not old enough to bear; as it is but four years since the first house was built in the neighborhood. Melons grow as fine here as in Jersey, as we have daily found through the kindness of friend Comstock. Potatoes are as fine as I ever saw and I have not the least doubt but sweet potatoes would grow as fine as anywhere, but they have not been tried until this summer. Turnips are said sometimes to grow as large as wooden buckets and are very fine.

Tell uncle that our neighbor, the widow Comstock is a connection of his. She is a sister to his aunt Hathaway's husband, and a really fine woman. Also that carpenters are so busy that it is a difficult matter to get work done by them.

I expect to put in a few acres of wheat this fall; enough for a year's supply at any rate; much more I cannot attend to on account of fencing.

Oct. 20. I forsook my writing when I had got thus far to witness or assist in the taking of a bee tree which are very abundant in this country. The quantity of honey taken from this tree was thirty or forty pounds, some are said to yield seventy or eighty pounds.

I think I shall take up another eighty acre lot adjoining mine which will make a better sized farm and give me plenty of wood land.

I have not "a stream of water running through my place," yet there is water on one end, which by proper management of my fields at that end, can be appropriated for the use of cattle in them, at the other end the water at the house will not be inconvenient.

Perhaps it may be interesting to thee to know the price of stock, produce etc. Wheat sells for seventy five cents, corn, I believe, about forty, oats about thirty. Rye is not grown here. Potatoes are now worth about fifty cents. I do not think they will remain at that price. Hay from four to six dollars per ton. Horses are not much used here yet. They may be bought for forty to eighty dollars. Oxen from thirty five to sixty-five a pair; cows from twelve to sixteen dollars. Of sheep, I cannot inform of the price Hogs and pigs perhaps the same value as with you. Pork will be worth four or five dollars the hundred. The whole surplus produce is now disposed of to the settlers. The price, of course, will fall somewhat when this demand is less than the quantity raised. About Ypsilanti, which is another settlement, the storekeeper pays fifty cents for wheat which they send in wagons to Detroit, and by water communication to Lake Erie. It would warrant the payment of a larger price.

Since we came here I have seen but one wolf, and very few snakes all of which I thought of a harmless specie. There are some wolves but they will always run from a man, a very few bears and no panthers that I have heard of. Deer are not very plenty, yet they are frequently seen. Raccoons are quite numerous, but I believe there are no beavers left. Pigeons, partridges pheasants, wild turkeys, geese and ducks may be said to be as plentiful here as in almost any other place.

If I have omitted anything thee would like to be informed of, please mention it when thee writes and I will endeavor to satisfy thee.

But my dear brother, do let us hear from you soon. Recollect how very interesting every item must be to us back woods people.

Thomas Chandler.

I cannot suffer brother T. to send off his letter without adding a few words, if they be only a greeting. I wish very much to hear from you and to know your plans for the future. I seldom look around me from our log habitation without wishing you were near us. Do not pray, suffer all the lots adjoining us to be usurped by strangers. It would be so delightful to see the roof of your dwelling peeping out from behind one of the knolls that swell up behind us.

People are crowding very fast into the territory and there appear to be fewer inconveniences and hardships to sustain than might reasonably be expected in so new a settlement. So far we have been very well satisfied; things have gone on well and smoothly, and I think I like the country even better than I did at first. At any rate, we coming in among all strangers, had a more formidable prospect and more difficulties to contend with, than any of our friends who may come after us. I think I may freely and safely say, "I am glad we came, and that we came here.'' Brother seems so happy and satisfied that I could scarcely be otherwise if I were disposed to be. He is now independent and master of a fine farm, which requires only industry to insure him a regular competence. He feels now settled and may look forward with as much confidence as the uncertainty of the work admits of or renders allowance to a gradual improvement in his circumstances, and there is some comfort, too, in our expecting the roughest part of our undertaking to come first.

But Thomas is waiting and I must not detain him. So adieu, with much love from Aunt Ruth as well as your far away sister.

Elizabeth."

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON SAVING TO INVEST

"You have talked so much about saving, Aunt Emmy," said Hilda to Aunt Emmy, "that I wonder if you will be kind enough to help Jack and me work out a way to save regularly. We do so want to get ahead. As Jack is getting a little more money this year, we plan to save that and keep right on living on what we got last year. Of course, it is hard to do without a lot of things we might have, but then Jack and I both feel that we don't want to be worried about money. If we have a little reserve fund, we can be prepared for emergencies."

"Bless my heart!" exclaimed Aunt Emmy. "It surely does sound good to hear such sensible talk from a youngster these days! I'll tell you what I think is a good plan for you to follow,—open a savings account with a bank that has a thrift department and every week put away a stated sum in your savings account. You will receive interest on this money, you know. Of course you receive only a moderate rate of interest on your savings, so it is a good idea to make a definite investment plan and invest your savings in sound securities that will yield a higher rate of interest.

"Accumulate your money, small sums at a time, in your thrift or savings account. Determine what sum you will use for your initial investment, say, $100 or $500. Save until you have twice that amount. If you decide to begin your investment on $100 save $200, then take $100 and buy a baby bond, or buy a large bond on the installment plan and apply the

1ST AMERICAN YOUTH ENTRY

Edith May Adams, eighteen-year-old Barrington, N. J., girl, presenting her entry blank to Mayor Kendrick in his office at City Hall, Philadelphia. The American Youth and Teacher Award was established as a tribute to American youth and teachers by the Board of Directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, through which the people of the United States and the world at large will celebrate the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence. The exposition will run from June 1 to December 1. Miss Adams' entry blank cited her for heroism displayed recently when she remained inside a burning building helping doctors render first aid to injured firemen. She is a candidate for the Golden Eaglette, the highest gift within the hands of the Girl Scouts. Each state will elect a girl and boy and one teacher to represent them and the successful candidates will be the guest of the Sesqui officials from June 28 to July 5 at the exposition. This will also include a trip to Washington where they will be received by President Coolidge and presented with medals.

War was once described as Prussia's most profitable industry.

It needs only a scant examination of history to learn that other countries were open to the same indictment. The methods of the Robber Barons did not pass with the end of feudalism. Annexation by conquest did not cease. But when America entered the World War President Wilson fathered a doctrine that shall always govern us—that never a foot of territory would be added to our boundaries by force.

So, as America has taken the lead toward making impossible national profit through war, it too may be America's privilege to point the way toward making impossible individual profit through war. To take the profit out of war is to take a long step toward creating an economic detestation of war. The experience of the United States in the World War affords a basis for the belief that the plan herein discussed is practical. In fact, it is more than a belief—it is a certainty, although not widely known.

The world is such a busy place, and the radius of human activity has been so greatly enlarged because of modern inventions, that it is not strange that there are but few people who are conversant with what was quietly but effectively taking place in this country in the mobilization and use of its material resources in the World War —a process that would have eventually eliminated all improper profits.

Strength is given to the public advocacy of industrial mobilsation made by both President Harding and President Coolidge—Mr. Coolidge as recently as last October in his Omaha speech to the American Legion—by the fact that the plan they advocated as a part of the regular national war agencies had once been set up and successfully operated under the War Industries Board.

Preceding the President's recent clear exposition of this subject, some degree of public interest had been engendered by an exchange of letters between Owen D. Young (of Dawes plan fame), in behalf of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, and the writer. The correspondence resulted in the establishment of lectures at the Page School (of Johns Hopkins University) on this theme. Previously the Atlantic Monthly printed an article by Sisley Huddleston, who pointed out that Europe saw great strides toward peace in the American idea of "taking the profit out of war" in a systematic way. His basic reference was to the plan of the War Industries Board.

The resources of a country might be referred to as the five M's: (1) man power; (2) money; (3) maintenance or food: (4) material resources (including raw materials, manufacturing facilities, transportation, fuel and power); and (5) morale. The intelligence with which the first four are directed and co-ordinated as a whole will determine the fifth, the morale of the community.

In the war emergency it early became evident to those who were charged with the responsibility of mobilizing the resources that there was a just sentiment among the people against profiteering. Profiteering might be willful and profit making might be involuntary; but, whatever its form, there was a just determination it should cease. So it became necessary to fix prices where the supply was limited.

Wherever the government created a shortage by its demands, prices were fixed, not only for the Army, Navy and the Allies, but for the civilian population as well. And in addition to price fixing on war essentials (such as steel, wool, copper, and so forth), the balance, after the war program had been filled, was rationed or distributed according to the priority needs of the various civilian demands. In other words, where the price of the product of an industry was fixed that industry had to deliver the part which the government did not need to the civilian population, not in the way the industry chose, but as the government directed.

It must be remembered that when the war came there was no adequate preparation. Indeed, it is doubted by the best authorities whether any effective form of preparation then known would have been of much avail in view of the widespread and engulfing results of the war and the lack of knowledge of the various instruments of destruction which were being devised and which it became necessary to combat.

One of them provided that manufacturers, jobbers and retailers of shoes could make and sell shoes only of a specified quality at a fixed price, effective July, 1919. No one who did not have a card of the War Industries Board in his window could sell shoes, and only the standardized shoes could be sold. No jobber or manufacturer would sell shoes to anybody who did not have this card. The shoes were to be stamped Class A, B or C and had to be of the quality prescribed and sold at the price fixed. The country was so organized in every district that there could be immediately reported to Washington the name of any shoe retailer who did not carry out the regulations of the War Industries Board as to price and quality. Through restrictions on his labor, money, raw materials and transportation no manufacturer would have been permitted to sell to any dealer violating the regulations. The Armistice stopped the execution of this plan.

Prohibition Law Protects Youth

"God only knows what conditions would be, with the enlarged freedom which young people now have, if prohibition were not in existence," declared A. A. Stagg, physical director of the University of Chicago, in his testimony before the Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "There would be an immeasurably greater amount of drunkenness and debauchery than there is now.

"In fact, it is my conviction that it is the greatest sort of blessing that prohibition has been a law during this unstable period when the youth of today have such vast freedom.

"It is this breaking down of the home and this irresponsibility on the part of the parents toward their children which creates the problem of today, and not the Volstead Act. The statement that prohibition has produced these conditions is an absurdity and pure bunk.

"The trouble with prohibition is not prohibition itself, but that it has not been given a fair chance. Before there should be any consideration of a change in the Volstead Act there ought to be an honest and conscientious effort made to enforce the law.

"This is not just my opinion; it is the opinion of some of the officers of the University of Chicago, and I have reason to think it is the opinion of millions of people in this country who are interested in giving the youth of the country every chance to grow up under the most favorable conditions, something which it cannot be truthfully said they now have.

"I come before you with no bias and I am a member of none of the organizations that wanted me to come here. I was born in a poor neighborhood of factory workers given to beer drinking, and as a boy I used to see the heads of nine out of twelve families in our block drunk and fighting. I saw multitudes of keg parties and saw young men drunk. The whole point of that is that some say you can't get drunk on beer. Well, I saw the boys and men get drunk—and women, too.

"I have been at the University of Chicago thirty four years and before prohibition I used to see scores of the men drunk, coming along Fifty-fifth Street from Lake Park Avenue in Hyde Park. Since prohibition I have seen very few drunk

"There has been an immense change, and I know a large number of students personally. Furthermore, I am convinced that there is not anything like the amount of drinking in the middle west among the younger generation that there was before prohibition.

"As to obeying the law, a whole lot of folks haven't been playing the game on the square nor according to the rules. This whole nation should set aside personal wishes and co-operate for the law. I think it is terribly important that a moral wave, a religious wave, sweep this country. Parents are running away from their responsibilities."—The Union Signal.

Call Feeders Day At M. S. C. June 4

Feeders Day at M. S. C., an annual occasion when livestock men of Michigan gather to study results of experimental work at the college will be held on Friday, June 4, this year, according to announcement made here this week by Prof. Geo. A. Brown.

The third year results of a special test in feeding baby beef for market will be given out on Feeders Day. May of the state's livestock feeders have been following this work closely, and the "baby beef" section is expected to prove about the most valuable among the various experiments.

One lot in this feeding test has been on a self feeder of grain, with two other lots on a limited grain ration. Each of the lots has been getting alfalfa hay and silage. One of the limited ration lots has been on a "home grown" ration—corn alfalfa, and silage. The other two lots have been getting linseed meal as protein supplement. The results of this experiment for all three years will be announced.

Other work in the college test feed lots, reports on which will be made on June 4, includes: "Economic Wintering of Work Horses"; "Hog Rations"; "Best Methods of Rye Feeding to Hogs"; and "Forage Crops Experiments With Hogs.

The morning of Feeders Day will be given over to inspection of the various animals on test, with a general program booked for the afternoon.

State Prepares For Nearing Show

Unique souvenir programs will be a special feature of the Third Annual Horse Show to be held May 28 and 29 in the football stadium of the "campus beautiful." The celebration, coming as it does the week-end before Decoration Day is expected to be among the most popular exhibits of saddle horses and horsemanship in the middle west.

Besides the general technical information about the competing horses, the program booklet will contain explanatory notes concerning the fine points in judging the excellence of the various performers. To a novice attending such a show this clearcut information is expected to be of considerable interest and help.

Drum Major James Hands has been busily engaged whipping the crack varsity military military band into condition to entertain the horse show audience "between acts." Of special interest to the students is the special drill formation of the block "S", the recently adopted school insignia to replace "M. A. C." of previous years.

The cadet cavalry officers are busily ironing out the defects in the hurdling and charging of the cavalry unit mounts. Some of the horses are hardly controllable after their long winter of inactivity. Others have forgotten a bit of the fineness they exhibited last spring. and must have their memories jogged a little by the steel spurs and tightened reins of the cadet officers.

The local horses, however, will have a comparatively small part in the heavy program of the two days They are entering but one of the 32 classes. The main attractions will be the thoroughbred animals from the larger cities of the middlewest.

New Soil Types To Be Tested In State

Best soil management practices for important Michigan soil types will be determined on a set of permanent experimental fields being established this sping by the M. S. C.

A number of these basic test fields are already under observation in the state, the expansion this spring being planned to include additional important soil types in the definite experimental work. The soils men at the college point out the importance of the soil type basis in determining correct soil management practices.

Two of the test fields just established are in Kent County, one on "Coloma sand" and one on "Kewanee loam". A field on "Miami loam" has been started in Ingham County; one on "Brookston Silt loam" in Saginaw County; and one on "Hillsdale Sandy loam" in Jackson County, according to O. D. Price, soils extension specialist at M. S. C.

More than 1,000 students from the high schools of Michigan which teach agriculture and home economics under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes law gathered at the M. S. C. last week for their annual conference, or Junior Farm Week. The youthful farmers and farmerettes came from 137 different schools, scattered all over the state. Class work, banquets, and general recreational events featured the conference, which was the largest of its kind ever held in Michigan.

Softwood Floors Now Armor Clad

Reams have been written on the subject of paint and it possibilities. Paint beautifies Paint protects. Paint enhances property value. Paint helps prevent disease, afford surfaces that are more sanitary; easier to clean. Paint saves labor. Paint makes for happiness. All this and much else has been said about paint, and the same things are of varnish.

But one characteristic of these two useful products, if not neglected altogether, seems to have touched on butlightly. And, strange as it may appear, this characteristic of paint is the most interesting and important of all.

Everyone knows that battleships are encased in steel, armor plate. This is to keep shot and shell from penetrating vital parts and certain paints and varnishes have precisely this characteristic. When fully dried, they have a toughness, entirely comparable to actual metal. In their armor-like impenetrability to the "shot and shell" of wear and weather they do exactly for the surfaces they coat what the armor coat is doing for the battleship.

Take for instance, a softwood floor. In the very nature of things it is comparatively soft and subject to abrasion. The hammering, shuffling, scraping, scarring abuse it gets makes it soon scuff up, wear thin around the knots and wear out. But give this same floor a coat or two of the right kind of paint or varnish, and what happens? It immediately becomes armored; takes on much of the durability and the appearance, too, of hardwood. Because of the astonishing hardness and toughness of its protective surface of paint or varnish no wear comes directly upon it. Its strength is never weakened by the thinning, scuffing-up process, and it lasts indefinitely. Such floors are always more beautiful and sanitary and the refinishings necessary to keep them so, come at such long intervals that the cost of maintainance is really but a trifle.

One well known paint that gives this result to floors is Acme Granite Floor Paint, so-called because of its granite like hardness and durability when dry. Other paint and varnish of equal desirability are sold here in this locality by the Acme Quality Paint and Varnish Service Station, representing the Acme White Lead & Color Works of Detroit.

Woollen Mills Needed In Michigan

The most recent enterprise of Henry Ford is the incorporation of three millions of dollars in establishing a plant for the manufacture of woollen goods in the vicinity of Ypsilanti. Just east of the city Ford has bought a great natural basin which he plans to flood with the waters of the Huron River. A monstrous concrete dam will be built here which will deliver many thousand horse power for the running of the mills. Mr. Ford plans to complete the first unit of his mills inside of two years and will employ 4500 workers therein. This will create a fine market for Michigan farmers wool clip. For the needs of the Ford car alone it will require 3,947,856 square yards cloth upholstery per year which will come from 2.500,000 sheep now grazing on the sunny slopes and pastures of Michigan. Michigan at present stands twelfth in wool producers with 2,000,000 sheep and we might say the industry is much hampered by the distance of manufacturing mills. Most all of this wool has to go to the New England states to be made up hence the expensive hauls, freight, and wastage. This ought not to be, hence Henry Ford with his mile long head has figured out that farmers and sheep raisers would be greatly benefitted by sending their wool a few miles and receiving the product in the shape of clothes, bed blankets and everything in the finished goods they need or the cash plus expensive freights and other consuming factors.

Not only will the launching of a new industry for the State—the textile industry—increase the breeding of sheep, but it means more mone for the wool grower who has not the long and expensive haul to market, It also means a difference in breeding, as the textiles needed by the Ford company requires staples of special length only grown on sheep of especially crossed breeds.

Already several large shipments have been made to the Ford Company and the residents of Ypsilanti are anticipating that within a few weeks great storehouses will rise along the banks of the Huron River near the site of the mills. Not only is the mill expected to come to the financial aid of the sheep raiser, but is expected to stimulate the growing of flax. The wide area surrounding the dam and mill cite which was acquired by Mr. Ford is now being sown by employes of Mr. Ford.

DAIRY FARMS PROSPER WITH ELECTRIC MOTOR

Dairymen have turned to electricity with a keen appreciation of its possibilities. The results, from reports that are thus far available, indicate that a most impressive amount of work on dairy farms is accomplished by electrical means, wherever the dairy farm has been wired.

There are certain daily duties on a dairy farm which must be performed without fail, and upon which depend the successful operation of the farm in its constant relation to the dairy markets supplied. The milking schedule and the cream separating "chore" represent the most important of these.

Dairy farms in various parts of the country have long been using electric milking machines and electric cream separators. In both instances, the time and drudgery saved by the electrical method have opened a new era of country life for the farm owner, his hired help and his whole family.

On a far western dairy farm, the electrical equipment consists of a total of seven motors, for both farm and farmhouse, driving a milking machine, a separator, a bottle-washing brush, a root-cutter, a woodsaw, a clothes washer and a sewing machine; two one-kilowatt electric water heaters, one one-kilowatt reflector heater, an electric mixer, an electric percolator, three electric irons, a toaster and a waffle iron.

The entire farm, of course, is also electrically lighted, this part of the equipment running up to 400 watts and including the use of electric lights for increasing the egg production of the chickens in the winter. Much of the farm's equipment, naturally, might be found on farms of any type, but this is thought to represent a fairly typical and fairly complete case of electrification for a dairy farm.

Airships and Great Guns

According to the occassionally reliable Moscow newspapers, the United States has the greatest military aviation service in the world. Russian newspapers now describe two American dirigibles, each mounting 20 cannon. The United States also has 14,000 military airplanes, according to the information on which the Russian commissar of war and navy bases his comparison to show the needs of the Soviet union. Though giant dirigibles capable of mounting 20 machine guns have not progressed beyond the drawing-board stage in the navy department designers' office, they have become an actuality in Russian newspapers that have printed pictures of them, cannons and all. "A country where peace is highly esteemed!" is the sarcastic line of explanation under the pictures.

Fathers and Mothers

"If fathers love their children too little," he said, "mothers love them too much. A mother is apt to love her child so extravagantly that she'll sacrifice anything for it—even her husband.

"One mother said to another:

"'What a naughty little boy Tommy is! Doesn't he know better than to keep striking you over the head with that heavy stick?'

"'Don't blame him,' said the second mother. 'Don't blame the little angel. He's only doing, bless his heart, what he sees his father do every day.'"

Tuckahoe is a name applied by the Algonquin Indians to many roundish roots. Specifically it included the golden club and the arrow arum, both having fleshy rootstocks, acrid when fresh, but rendered edible by cooking and abounding in starch. Another highly prized tuckahoe is a subterranean fungus found in the southern states. It is not unlike a coconut. It is also known as Indian bread or Indian loaf.

At length, by a supreme effort, the under man reached the knife beneath his back with the hand of a pinioned arm. With a heave the hand was free and the blade turned into the body above him. But in a flash the right hand of the Iroquois shifted from the throat to the menacing wrist. There was a wrench—a groan as the bone snapped, and the knife slipped to the snow.

Again, like the fangs of a wolf, the long fingers of Michel clamped on the throat of the man in whose bulging eyes shone the fear of the death which neared

"Dis ees for her!" snarled the headman, as he struck with his free hand the purpled face. "Dees ees for me!" and he struck again.

Slowly the bloodshot eyes of the assassin, who had so confidently shot from the ambush, filmed; for the last time his mouth gaped wide for the air denied him by the vise on his throat—with a quiver he relaxed on the snow.

Picking up his rifle and slipping his hands into the rabbit-skin mittens which hung from his neck by thongs, Michel bent and closely scrutinized the knotted feature of his enemy. Satisfied with his work, he rasped: "Bo'-jo'! Tete-Boule! You are poor shot! You mak' no more trouble een dis valley!" and started for camp.

He found his friends at breakfast. Silently he accepted the dipper of steaming tea and the heaped plate of fried moose and beans, and began to eat.

"Well, what luck, Michel? Are they still leaving?" asked Steele, when his eyes suddenly focused on the shoulder of Michel's capote. "Where'd you get that tear?"

The face of the Iroquois was wooden. "I meet old frien' een de bush. Ah-hah!"

Curious, Steele rose and examined his friend's shoulder. "Why, there's caked blood here! You have been shot at!" he cried. "Take off that coat!"

"W'en I feenish de moose and bean," laughed the stoic. "Hees gun shake w'en he fire!"

To his relief Steele found that the bullet had grazed the shoulder blade of his friend, barely breaking the skin. When the scratch was dressed, Michel gave him the story of the ambush.

With the sting of the bullet across his shoulder, the cool-headed Indian had sensed that he was not badly hurt, and made the only move that would check a swift second shot from a concealed foe—dropped as if killed or mortally hurt. Sprawled on his face, a knee drawn up to give purchase for a lunge, he had waited for the man in ambush to approach within reach. Had there been two, it would have been a knife fight, with the odds heavily against the man compelled to start from the soft snow.

"Good old Michel!" applauded Steele, as the Iroquois finished. "They can't beat you! He was scared when he fired. Had you ever seen this Indian before?"

"Traded once at Wailing River, you mean?"

"Ah-hah! he come to de post."

"When?"

"He was dere dis summer. He got leg lak' bow ov snowshoe. Hees eye look lak' de mink. He—"

"You mean—good Lord! It wasn't Tete-Boule?" cried the surprised American.

"He found your trail leading to the lake and took a chance you would backtrack—which you did." Delightedly Steele shook the hand of the Indian until the sore shoulder protested.

"Tomorrow night we go to de pos'."

"Yes," agreed Steele, his eyes reflecting the joy of victory, hard won. "Send one of the boys for David at once."

CHAPTER XVII

Behind the slab counter in the trade-room at Ogoke a man sat at a table. On the table stood a glass and two bottles—one empty. For hours the man had not moved, except to fill and drain the glass. Although it was barely three o'clock, candle lanterns dimly lit the room, for the sun had died in cloud banks and the light had failed early. In the air outside there was snow and the night would be thick.

The yelping of dogs aroused the man from his bitter thoughts. The door of the room opened and a bulky figure entered. The muscles of his hooded face, disfigured by a long scar, twitched nervously. In his eyes was fear.

"I found him," gasped the big man, in French, breathing hard, for he had raced the dusk to the post. "Choked! Not a mark on him—his tongue out and his eyes bulging like a pike's you squeeze in your hand! Ambushed!"

"So they got him, too?" nodded Laflamme, chin on chest.

"It's no good, I tell you," whined Antoine, his voice vibrant with panic. "That makes nine—nine who have gone out. It'll be our turn next. Tonight I leave for the Rouge."

The hard eyes of the trader, lined by worry and red from drink, lit with contempt. "You've gone like the rest. Why didn't you run away with Rose? Want to desert sixty thousand dollars' worth of fur, do you?"

The heavy features of the other filled with blood at the taunt. He leaned and struck the table with his fist, overturning the bottles.

"Soft, am I?" he snarled, "because I leave this hell before they close in and take us—hang us from the rafters here or cut our throats, you call me soft! I tell you we're done! They caught Pierre and the whole valley's after us. They're out there now, waiting." He pointed a shaking finger toward the forest. "It may be tonight—they come."

Ruined by the mystery—the menace of the inscrutable forest from which no man returned, which for weeks had ringed the post, sapping the nerve of his people until they fled in the night, Laflamme sat, numb with despair. Slowly the whisky from the overturned bottle dripped to the floor. Then he said: "That tale Tete-Boule brought from down-river was true. The men we sent to the Jackfish to stop him lied."

Antoine nodded.

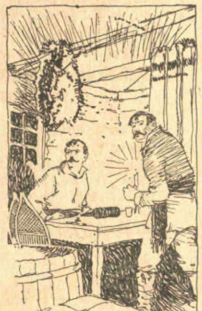
"Steele got through and came back on the snow," continued the trader. "The police are not in this. They'd come straight here."

"This Steele caught Pierre himself," added the other. "When the Indians learned how we had fooled them, they took the trail. The whole valley was ours—until he got the Windigo." Suddenly the speaker faced the door, listening. "What's that?"

As the two watched the door apprehensively, it opened to admit a half-breed with drink-sodden face.

"What you eat tonight, m'sieu?" The dull eyes of the cook shifted uneasily from Antoine to his chief.

"You here still, Philippe?" sneered Laflamme. "I thought you and Jean would hit the Rouge river trail when it got dark. All the rats have left."



Suddenly the Speaker Faced the Door, Listening. "What's That?"

"They'll hang on while the whisky lasts," muttered Antoine.

"You find Tete-Boule?" The face of the cook, mottled-gray in the half light, turned to the man who had gone out that morning on the trail over which none had returned.

"He found him—with his tongue out." Laflamme laughed bitterly. "You'd make a pretty picture, Philippe, hanging from that hook, with your throat cut. You'd bleed straight Scotch; you've lived on it for months."

The stark terror in the eyes of the half-breed seemed to appease his chief, who went on: "We'll have bacon and potatoes—if they give us time to eat them. Bring that jug."

The jug was placed on the table between the two men, and the cook, muttering incoherently, shuffled to the door.

"Two left, out of the lot; and they stay for the whisky!" commented Laflamme, filling a glass and shoving the jug across the table. "My friend, I'll give you a toast," he added, as the nerve-shattered Antoine gulped down his drink. "May that d—d American rot in h—l!"

Laflamme's glass was at his lips when a chorus of howls rose from the clearing.

The startled eyes of the men met across the table. "What's that?" demanded the trader, slowly lowering his glass, untouched.

"The dogs—hear something—out there!" The hoarse voice of the other quavered as he went to the door.

From the murk, the whimpering of the awed huskies reached the straining ears of the two at the door, who stood, nerves strung with suspense—one thought in their brains.

Then from the invisible forest beyond rose a wail—demon-like, blood-freezing, the voice of no clawed creature of the night—to die away, into silence.

"They have come!" warned Antoine, seizing the arm of his chief.

"Quick! Harness the dogs while I get the fur and the grub!" was the low answer.

The nerve of Laflamme had snapped. Racing desperately against the closing in of a ring of ruthless foes, Antoine caught and harnessed the dogs. At the trade-house door, grub-bag, robes, and the precious pack of black fox were thrown on the sled. The whip cracked at the head of the lead-dog. "Marche, Pete!" rasped the Frenchman, and the team plunged into their collars at a gallop. Then the voice of a dog-driver out on the lake trail drifted back through the thick night.

"There go the last of the rats!" muttered Laflamme. "Now the ship can sink." And they lashed the swift, six-dog team out to the lake ice, and through the gloom that masked the Rouge river trail.

CHAPTER XVIII

From the blackness of the clearing at Ogoke rose a low whistle, which was answered from the gloom behind the trader's quarters, where the kitchen windows shone, yellow patches in the thick dark night.

The whistle was repeated and, simultaneously, swart faces appeared at the windows of both buildings. Eyes, glittering with hate and the pent excitement of the stalk, searched the rooms for signs of life. But they looked on emptiness—on a table splashed with spilled liquor, a jug, an untouched glass of whisky; on a stove from which smoked a frying pan with its burning bacon.

"I knew you would stampede them, Michel," said Steele, looking quizzically at the happy Iroquois. "They got out just ahead of us. You did that for David, you rascal!"

The hour of the man from Nepigon had struck. Like a hound at leash he yearned for the Rouge river trail—and the man who traveled it.

Steele gripped the hard hand of his friend in silence. There was nothing to say—no turning the Ojibway from his heart's desire. With a word to Michel, David left them to get his dogs.

"What shall we do with last year's hunt, if we find he hasn't shipped it?" queried Steele.

"Give eet to de Indian. Dey trade eet at Wailing Riviere."

"Yes, he got most of it with his whisky—by fraud. It ought to go back to them."

To the surprise of the men as they reached the fur-storing loft, the candles lighted row on row of otter and mink, lynx and fox, marten and fisher pelts, hanging from the rafters.

"Yes, they will trade it at Wailing River, unless—" The Indian waited, wondering at the qualification—"unless Lascelles refuses to sign a certain paper."

"Ah-hah! He not get her—now!" The grave eyes of the Iroquois questioned Steele's.

"Not if I can help it!"

Satisfied, the Indian turned to examine the fur. Steele began counting the rows of rich pelts, in an endeavor to make a rough estimate of their value. He had reached the far end of the loft when the dim light of the candle fell on some bulky shapes on the floor in a corner. Curious, he bent over the lashed bundles. On the canvas covering of the nearest there was lettering. He lowered his candle to read it.

"R—F," he said aloud; then, with a gasp, "Wailing River!"

"Michel!" he called, "Revillon Freres, Wailing River! Well, I'll be—The fur-packs from the lost canoe! Murdered—ambushed, they were, for the fur!"

Michel knelt beside Steele. "By gar! our fur!" he said, peering at the wrappings, his voice hoarse with excitement. "Dey keel our men at de Devil's mile!" The muscles of his lean face knotted. "But Laflamme ees dead man now. Tonight Daveed take his trail."

They rolled out the fur-packs with the eighteen thousand dollars in pelts, which had left the post in the spring only to vanish on the lower Wailing.

"He'll know it as soon as one of the boys can reach him," replied Steele jubilantly. "We'll send him this present in the morning." After the gray days the sun was indeed breaking through. She seemed nearer—more possible of attainment, there in the dark fur-loft at Ogoke, than she had been for weeks, to the man who toiled for her.

That Earth Is Round Has Long Been Known

Discovery at Oxford of a musty tome written a couple of centuries before Columbus' time, in which it is definitely stated the "urthe is round," will not surprise any person conversant with the subject. The assumption that the science of the Dark ages was sterile and entirely incorrect has always been gratuitous.

Knowledge, it is true, was not widespread among the masses. Scientists were inclined to keep their discoveries more or less secret for several reasons. But it is certain that an exchange went on among the elect and it is presumable that Columbus had access to documents, information and maps which have since been lost.

Unscientific and uneducated persons, such as kings and queens and emperors, naturally would not have understood scientific proof any more than, say, the average politician today understands the proof of the Einstein "theory." The theory that the earth is round must have had quite a wide circulation long before Columbus set out to put it to practical use.—New York Evening Post.

Woman's "Second Leisure"

There comes a time in most women's lives when the children are grown that there is a let-down in life's responsibilities. That time I call the "second leisure." It is a blessing for such women to have an interest in something outside their home. It keeps them young And their energies which have been heretofore employed in rearing a family, if they are harnessed, can be made of infinite use to the world and joy to themselves.—Congresswoman Kahn of California.

If you want to buy a car on time

IT is to your advantage to buy the car that you can comfortably afford, on a payment plan that gives you a sure margin of safety.

General Motors has its own finance company, the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, operating the GMAC Plan. Through its service more than 1,000,000 families have purchased cars comfortably out of income.

On August 1 last, the price of this service, which had always been low, was further reduced. And the automobile-buying public is now saving millions of dollars annually as a result of this reduction and the influence of General Motors' leadership.

The purchase of automobiles on time is a universally accepted practice. The car is a utility and it is sound business to conserve capital and use credit. But buy on sound terms and at low rates. Any General Motors dealer will explain the advantages of the GMAC Plan.

Library Benefit Concert

North Adams Public Library is now a growing institution and one of the public utilities of our village. Through the perseverance and faith of members of the Woman's Club and those who have donated to them the Library is now on a firm footing but it needs attention. From a few insignificant books it has grown to 800 volumes with more constantly being added. The immense benefits of this place to the high school students and younger generation of our village cannot be over estimated. You and I and all of us should feel this as a personal charge to be maintained. To this end the Library Board have decided to place a concert before the public of the best talent obtainable here, and will donate the proceeds to expenses of maintaining the Library. Therefore you are kindly asked to spare a few moments of your time and attend this entertainment which will be under the direction of Mrs. Eugene Rogers. On Friday evening (to-night) May 21, at 8:00 p. m. Following is the program.

Putting Farm Work Horses in Condition

Harvesting small grain in the great Northwest.

Progress in farm field work in the coming months depends largely on the condition of the work horses. Soft from the winter's rest, farm work horses require conditioning just as an athlete requires training for his test.

Every farmer knows that two or three weeks spent in a gradual toughening and conditioning of a horse for the heavy work is more than made up before the season of heavy field work is over. Not only does this conditioning include breaking them in to the long hours of hard pull that they must undergo, but applies as well to breaking them in to a working ration.

It is poor practice to allow a horse to pasture on much new lushy grass if he is to go on a strenuous work schedule. A little grass is good for him, helps to condition him, but he must have oats, bran or old corn, or still better, a combination of the three and good sound hay. These are the best possible rations in the spring and early summer. The horse that is fed a major ration of grass soon gets soft, sweats profusely, lags and quickly plays out. Oats, bran, corn and hay will give him stamina and leave him in the best condition at the end of the day.

By treating old Dobbin fairly, getting him ready for spring work with daily exercise, keeping him thoroughly groomed, especially while shedding, and a work ration instead of his winter feed will pay big dividends in a short time.

If the horse takes a long time to shed his coat, this can be facilitated by thorough, frequent grooming and if this does not do the work, a clipping all over will get him through the shedding period quickly. After the horse has started to work in the field, it is advisable to bathe the shoulders and neck two or three times daily with cold, soft, salty water or with white oak bark tea which toughens and cleanses the chafed parts.

A prominent veterinarian states that excessive sweating is remedied by clipping the horse. Excessive sweating weakens the animal and it is doubtless quite advisable to clip him to relieve this condition. It is also true that this practice enables the horse to be thoroughly groomed in much less time than when it retains its long winter coat of shaggy hair.

What might have been a serious accident, happened on the gravel road east of North Adams about 9:30 Wednesday morning when Herbert Patton driving the Standard Oil truck near the Strobel residence, saw a bread wagon coming north at Murdock's corner, and a coupe headed south. Mr. Patton slowed up and endeavored to pass but was crashed into by the bread wagon, and the oil wagon turned over. The cab was demolished and Mr. Patton's arm injured. The bread wagon driven by Mr. Edwards of Jonesville sustained 3 broken wheels. Myles Bleech was driving from the north and he assisted in extricating the wrecks and getting the truck right side up, after which it was towed into town. The exceedingly heavy traffic on our road this summer calls for extreme care in driving.

Read of Other Women Who Found Health

Brooklyn, New York.—Mrs. G. Hegmann of 35 Central Ave., was in a run-down condition and could not do her housework. She could not sleep at night. Her story is not an unusual one. Thousands of women find themselves in a similar condition at some time in their lives. "I found your advertisement in my letter box," wrote Mrs. Hegmann, "and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got relief." Mrs. Hegmann also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine and Lydia E. Pinkham's Pills for Constipation, with good results. She says, "I am recommending your medicines to all I know who have symptoms the same as mine, and to others whom I think it will help. You may use my statement as a testimonial, and I will answer any letters sent to me by women who would like information regarding your medicines."

There are women in your state—perhaps in your town—who have written letters similar to this one telling how much Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped them.

The Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass., will gladly furnish other women with these names upon request.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM S. VARE'S victory in the Pennsylvania Republican senatorial primaries was the week's most notable event in the United States, because, as viewed by Mr. Vare himself and a great many other people, it was a victory for the cause of modification of the Volstead act rather than for Mr. Vare personally. True, the combined votes of Vare's rivals, Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot, exceeded that of Vare by about 150,000, and both of them are pronounced drys. But Vare's election, if he wins in November means one more wet vote in the senate; and according to many political observers the Pennsylvania vote makes it certain that the beer and light wine issue will be a leading issue in the congressional elections this year. Party lines will not be closely observed in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Massachusetts and some other states, it is predicted. In the Keystone state Vare's Democratic opponent will be William B. Wilson, former secretary of labor, nominated without opposition. He is a dry. Governor Pinchot may decide to lead a bolt of dry Republicans and run independently, and if he does, the Democrats think they have a chance to win in that overwhelmingly Republican state. Anyhow, the drys declare they will not support Vare, though Senator Pepper asserts he will stand by the party's choice.

PENNSYLVANIA'S primaries had something more than an echo in the senate chamber. Indeed, there was a veritable explosion there, for Senator Reed of Missouri took advantage of the published stories of vast expenditures on behalf of certain of the Republican candidates and brought forward again his resolution for investigation of primary campaign expenditures, first offered during the April contest in Illinois. He made a red hot speech in support of it, and was answered by Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, who tried to defend the fair name of his state. The affair was embarrassing especially to those senators who come up for re-election in the fall. The vote to take up the resolution for consideration was 45 to 34, the nays being all Republicans. When the vote on adoption was taken it revealed some sudden and rather panicky switching. Fourteen more Republicans joined the Democrats in voting aye, and seven G. O. P. men ducked out of the chamber to avoid being recorded. The 14 were:

Butler, Cameron, Cummins, Curtis, Dale, Gooding, Harreld, Jones of Washington, McMaster, Pine, Stanfield, Weller, Williams and Willis. The seven who fled were: Capper, Deneen, Keyes, Reed of Pennsylvania, Watson, Norbeck and Robinson of Indiana. The vote was 59 to 13.

Comment by Reed of Missouri was characteristic:

"The fact is that 34 of you voted against taking up this resolution, and 21 of you, and I am going to drop into the vernacular—welched inside of 7¾ minutes. . . . It is a remarkable exhibition of intellectual activity. . . . Yes, in that period of time 21 senators changed their minds. If we had had two or three minutes more the other 13 would have changed also, in my judgment."

Vice President Dawes appointed this committee to carry on the investigation: Senators David A. Reed (Rep., Pa.), Charles S. Deneen (Rep., Ill.), Robert M. La Follette, Jr. (Prog. Rep., Wis.), James A. Reed Dem., Mo.), Thomas F. Bayard (Dem., Del.). Reed of Pennsylvania, Deneen and Bayard, resigned for good reasons and were replaced by Fernald (Rep., Maine) Goff (Rep., W. Va.) and King (Dem., Utah).

The committee is empowered to sit during the summer recess and to investigate the expenditures of money not only in primaries that already have been held but also in those yet to come and in the impending election campaigns of the 34 senators who come up for re-election in November.

SENATOR REED of Pennsylvania, who supported Pepper, said he would advise his friends in the Pennsylvania legislature to vote for the holding of a referendum on prohibition modification, and at a conference with President Coolidge and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon he urged this course. New York state is going to have such a referendum, for the bill providing for it was signed on Wednesday by Governor Smith after he heard both sides.

MARSHAL JOSEF PILSUDSKI succeeded in his revolutionary coup in Poland, and now doesn't seem to know just what to do with his success. He installed Rataj as acting president and Charles Battel as premier, but he firmly resisted all the demands that he assume the dictatorship, asserting that he was a liberal democrat and opposed to absolute rule. Neither would he stand as a candidate for the presidency. This led the Socialists and Radicals to desert him and to denounce him for a needless shedding of blood, although the marshal apparently had done all he could to avoid this. Indeed, his supporters say he originally had no intention of overthrowing the government, desiring merely to make a demonstration before the Belvedere palace in protest against the corruption of the administration. Acting President Rataj has summoned the national assembly to meet May 28 to elect a new president. Many of the deputies demanded that the session be held outside of Warsaw.

General Haller, one of Pilsudski's leading opponents, was supposed to be organizing a counter-revolution at Posen where it was reported he had more than 10,000 troops. Pilsudski started negotiations with him to avoid further fighting.

DISPATCHES to the London Daily Express tell of another terrific bombardment of Damascus by the French in which the Midan section of that city was utterly destroyed by shells and flames and 500 civilians and 100 rebels were killed. Druse rebels had attacked French military posts and then took refuge in the Midan quarter. The French commander gave the inhabitants an hour to get out of range of his guns and then opened fire on the barricaded Druses with three-inch guns, howitzers and airplanes. The bombardment lasted 15 hours and the slaughter of the natives was terrible. In a recent interview given a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune the nationalist leaders of Syria declare they will continue the fight against the French to the death unless their demands for independence are recognized. They hope for intervention by the League of Nations, since France holds the mandate for Syria under the league.

THE Norge, which landed at Teller, Alaska, instead of Nome, after its epochal flight over the North pole, has been dismantled for shipment to the United States and Captain Amundsen says he is done with polar exploration. Since he has been to both the North and South pole, his retirement is understandable. On the other hand, Lieutenant Commander Richard Byrd, the American who was first to fly over the North pole in an airplane, is now planning an expedition to the South pole. He and his party have left Spitzbergen for London.

THOUGH Great Britain is returning to normal conditions in most respects after the general strike, the miners are still out. Thursday their delegates in conference rejected the government's proposals for settlement because they included a reduction of wages. The delegates asserted the pay does not at present provide for a decent standard of living.

The country is beginning to learn what the general strike cost it. Walter Runciman, in the house of commons, estimated the total direct loss to trade at £26,500,000 (about $130,000,000) and indirect loss to the country's industries of more than £30,000,000. Four railway companies roughly estimated their losses at more than £5,000,000, while the National Union of Railway Men figures the strike cost to it at more than £1,000,000. The government has announced no new taxation will be necessary to pay the strike bill.

DR. WILHELM MARX, leader of Center party, is again chancellor of Germany, having succeeded Doctor Luther. He is supported by a large majority of the reichstag, and has pledged himself to continue Luther's foreign policy and to uphold the Locarno pacts. He promised the Republicans the government would prepare a new law on the national flag that would satisfy everybody.

AMERICA and Great Britain seem to stand alone in the meeting of the preparatory disarmament commission at Geneva, the delegates of nearly all other countries opposing the view of Lord Cecil and Hugh Gibson that the popular conception of armaments only can be taken as the basis of general disarmament. The others insisted that invisible war factors also must be considered. . The commission decided that only peacetime armaments could be limited by international agreement. But it accepted a reservation of Paul Boncour of France that any formula on the reduction of peacetime armaments must recognize the geographic, economic, and military conditions, as well as population, upon all of which wartime power depends.

ITALY'S new Fascist syndicalist system of government is now in full effect, having been inaugurated by a proclamation by Premier Mussolini. He said it was an experiment which the Fascists were confident would succeed where other forms of government had failed. The Duce continued:

"For the first time in the history of the world, a constructive revolution like ours, pacifically realized in the field of production and labor, gathers together all economic and intellectual forces of the nation to direct them toward a common goal. For the first time is created a potent system of 15 great associations, all placed on a basis of equality, all recognized and guaranteed in their legitimate united interests as part of the sovereign state.

"Only today the people, which labor in their varied activities, lift themselves as enlightened co-workers of their own destiny."

SEBASTIAN S. KRESGE of New York, multimillionaire owner of chain stores, announced a further gift of $23,000,000 to the Kresge Foundation to be used for charitable and public welfare purposes. He started the foundation two years ago with $2,000,000. The foundation will first make a general survey to determine the best channels of distribution and when the program has been decided on the expenditures will be left to the discretion of the trustees. Mr. Kresge intends to make further gifts as the work proceeds. He has already made other large contributions for religious and temperance work.

ARCHBISHOP GEORGE J. CARUANA, papal nuncio to Mexico, has been expelled by the Calles government on the charge that he made false declarations when he entered Mexico regarding his birth, profession and religion. This he has absolutely denied. He is a citizen of the United States and has come to this country.

Other incidents of the week in brief: Millions of dollars of damage was done in northern Italy by floods following severe storms.

The house of representatives passed the Johnson bill making great changes in the World war veterans' act of 1924, and the Sanders bill prohibiting the transportation of pistols and revolvers through the mails.

French franc made new low record, reaching 36.17 to the dollar.

Mohammed VI, ex-sultan of Turkey; A. W. Gilchrist, former governor of Florida; A. R. Metcalfe, authority on whist, and W. E. D. Stokes, New York hotel owner and figure in noted divorce litigation, were among those taken by death.

Clyde Liner Seneca went aground off Miami and the rescued passengers accused the crew of being intoxicated.

Small Farm Profits in Southern Illinois

Urbana, Ill.—Farmers in two different sections of southern Illinois last year got less than an average of $1,000 each for their labor, risk and management after they had met expenses and allowed 5 per cent interest on their average capital investment in land, buildings, live stock, equipment and crops, according to University of Illinois.

The report for the section covered by Cumberland, Clark and Crawford counties shows that the labor and management wage of 19 farmers in those three counties who kept accounts in connection with the college's farm account project averaged $623, while 30 account-keeping farmers in the second section, which takes in Montgomery, Macoupin, Bond and Madison counties, realized an average of only $913 for their labor and management.

These earnings undoubtedly are above the general average for the rank and file of all farmers in the two sections, the farm management department points out.

The ten most successful farmers in the group of 30 from Montgomery, Macoupin, Bond and Madison counties, realized an average labor and management wage of $2,005, while the ten least successful farmers in the group lacked an average of $411 of paying 5 per cent interest on their average capital even when no charge was made for their labor and management.

About 1500 persons from Monroe city and county will take part.

Flint—Sitting on a railroad track with his head in his hands probably will cost James Moran, 45 years old, his life. He was removed to a hospital where attendants said he had little chance to recover. The fact that Moran was sitting on the track near a curve prevented the engineer seeing him in time to stop the train.

Lansing—Authority to incorporate in Michigan with a capital stock of $1,000,000 has been granted the Detroit River Subways company by the state public utilities commission. The company plans to build two double-tube tunnels for vehicular and train passage between Detroit and Windsor at the outset and add more tubes as traffic increases.

Owosso—Social activities are becoming so numerous in many homes over the week-end that grade and high school students are not obtaining the rest they need, E. A. Kalamazoo—Kalamazoo fishermen do not favor advancing the opening day of the bass season from June 16 to July 1, this year, as proposed by John Baird, conservation director. Bass have been bedding in the lakes of this section of the state for a period of several weeks. The spawning season will be normal in this district this year, and fishermen here feel that they should not be penalized because of the unusual condition that has delayed spawning in the lakes of the northern section of the state.

Battle Creek—Visiting the House of David grounds in Benton Harbor, recently, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Morley of this city found an old pocketbook, containing apparently $1.05 in change. Having visions of some "poor widow," who might be needing the money, they took the pocketbook to the House of David. Cult officials did not want it, saying "finders keepers." But the Morleys found that the purse contained $3,800 in currency, three diamond rings and a diamond lavellier. Within, too, was an address, so the identity of the owner was learned.

Tablet Throws Light on Noah and the Ark

In 1872 George Smith of the British museum found an interesting tablet in Nineveh. The inscriptions were deciphered by Assyriologists soon afterward, but Paul Haupt, professor of Assyriology at Johns Hopkins university, has recently rendered a more complete translation. He first restored the tablet to make it legible. Professor Haupt told the American Oriental society at Philadelphia that the inscriptions relate the story of Noah and the ark. According to this account, Noah cut trees down in the jungle and made an ark consisting of six decks which were divided into seven compartments. Two-thirds of the ark was under water when it was afloat. Part of the translation reads: "For our food I slaughtered oxen and killed sheep—day by day. With beer and brandy, oil and wine, I filled large jars, as with water of a river."—Pathfinder Magazine.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Summing Up Of Evidence At Hearing

BEFORE SUB-COMMITTEE OF SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, President National Women's Christian Temperance Union

The modificationists miserably failed in the hearings before the Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee to sustain their contentions that the sale of wine and beer would solve the liquor problem.

It was shown that many benefits in health, morals, and economics have resulted from prohibition, in addition to the outlawing of saloons, and that even in wet centers the reports of law violations are greatly exaggerated.

It was shown that the prohibition law can be enforced when Federal, state and local officials do their duty and when the Government provides sufficient funds and an adequate personnel;

That failure on the part of officials to do their duty is responsible for alleged conditions in large cities

That Government control of the sale of beer and wine furnishes the same kind of problems in enforcement as are found under prohibition;

That the legalized sale of beer and wine does not prevent the illegal sale of these beverages and of hard liquors.

That the proponents of the amendments to permit the sale of beer and wine are using their proposition for increasing the alcoholic content of intoxicating liquors;

That the continuous agitation against the law as it now stands is a contributing factor to lawlessness

That the need in the United States is a strengthening, not a weakening of the law, greater emphasis on law observance, greater care in the granting of permits in order to prevent the diversion of alcohol to beverage purposes.

We call upon all who love their country, to respect its Constitution and to obey its laws. We pledge to the officials charged with the responsibility of enforcing the law, our support to the end that the sovereignty of this law, as of every other law, may be demonstrated and the United States may have the full benefit of the prohibition of the beverage traffic in intoxicating liquors.—The Union Signal.

Michigan Science College Appoints Leaders

Appointment of two new extension leaders, to be known as district extension representatives, was announced this week at the M. S. C.

Mr. L. L. Drake, a former county agricultural agent, and W. C. Cribbs, formerly a marketing specialist with the college extension staff, have been assigned to the new places. Drake will have headquarters at Bay City, while Cribbs is to be at Cadillac.

The new field men will serve to co-oridinate all agricultural and home economics extension work in the districts surrounding their headquarters, according, to R. J. Baldwin, extension director at M. S. C, on whose recommendation the new posts have been created. Several counties in the sections to be handled by Cribbs and Drake are without county agricultural agents. The new men will give extension service in such counties and aid in organization work looking toward the establishment of agents.

Marked development in organized agricultural extension work is expected by college officials to follow the "district representative" plan. Michigan is so large a state, and its agriculture is so diversified that it is difficult for the state extension office at East Lansing to keep in close touch with the problems of special sections, according to Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. Drake is to supervise work in 15 counties around Bay City. Cribbs will be assigned particularly to Kalkaska, Missaukee, Osceola Clare, Lake, and Benzie counties.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

Hazelbank, 2d. Mo. 12. 1832,
My dear Aunt:

The paper thee has sent me is such a formidable size, my dear aunt that I cannot attempt to write a letter upon it at one writing so thee must consider it as after some fashion a sort of journal.

Our friend Benjamin Lundy the Abolitionist editor, left here on the 6th day for Ohio.—He had no public meeting, but several persons subscribed for the paper, which I hope will be the means of extending the Emancipation Spirit that steadily prevails through our settlement.

Oh! how I sometimes long to be with you again for a few days. I could almost find it in my heart to "play the baby" when I think how far we are separated. But these are feelings that I do not cherish, I have chosen my lot, and I am satisfied with it. I believe that I am in my place and that we did well in coming here.

Yesterday there was a slow sleet falling all day and in the evening we had considerable lightning and some thunder, one clap of which would not have been considered very light even in summer. During the night there were some heavy showers of rain, and this morning the trees, bushes, etc. were incrusted with the heaviest coating of ice that I ever remember to have seen—they look most beautiful.

Such weather as this brother Thomas makes use of, doing his carpenter work, there is yet a sufficient quantity of it needed about the house to keep him in employment during the hours which are not fit for out door work, though our down-stairs rooms are pretty nearly finished; a snug stair case having taken place of our ladder, and walnut doors of the checked curtains, which for a time were made use of as a substitute for them.

By a new arrangement of the mails, since the first of the year, they have been brought in to Adrian twice a week, very much to my satisfaction as I do not have to look forward quite so long without the hope of receiving something from the post office. Communication, too takes place within a much shorter time, between here and Philadelphia, the distance between that city and Detroit being traversed by the mail in seven days. Letters, etc. from there reach us in about ten days.

As brother, the other day was standing by the window, he summoned us to his side to see three deer that had just come in sight and were browsing on the tops of the bushes quite fearlessly, at a short distance from the house. T. had lent his gun to one of his neighbors so he offered them no disturbance, and they kept their station for I suppose about fifteen minutes when they started off and were out of sight in an instant. They are very pretty creatures, and their near approach to the house seems so innocent and confiding that I did not feel sorry to see them bound off undisturbed.

We have had company every First day for this six or seven weeks until the last one; as the spell is broken now I suppose we may look to be often alone for a while. The people in our settlement are sociable, but I do not think it can be called a visiting neighborhood.

19th. First day. We have not been out to meeting to-day, nor has anybody been here. We have never yet so far lost our reckoning of time out here in the woods as to be unable to tell what day it was, or to get entirely wrong in the arrangements. All our neighbors, however, have not been so fortunate. One of them, last winter went out a Seventh day morning, as he thought, to do a pretty good day's work in the woods, and his wife at home was equally busy baking, scrubbing, etc. of Seventh day's work. She had just got house a tidied up in the afternoon, though the floor was still wet, when her sister came in and in some surprise asked what she was doing and why she was not at meeting. She, equally surprised that her sister should have been there, replied that she expected to go the next day, and was not a little "struck of a heap" as the folks say to find that herself and her liege lord had been so outrageously trespassing on the Sabbath.

29th. Brother has just finished clearing a space of ten acres ready to fence and break up as soon as the ground is clear of snow and frost.

There has been a great deal of good sleighing here this winter, but we have not availed ourselves of it as much as we probably should have done, had we been provided with some better means of conveyance than our ox sleigh. It is too low a way of traveling for evening visits, unless for quite a short distance, or very cold weather.

I have just learned very much to my satisfaction, for a scarcity of books is among my greatest grievances, that a Library Company is about to be organized at Adrian.

The "Saturday Evening Post" is exceedingly interesting to us. I hardly know how we did without before we received them for when anything prevents their being sent from the post office at the usual time, which is now second or third day or evening, we feel as if there was something wanting till it arrives. It is very pleasant to know what is going on in the world that we came from, even if we are in such an out of the world place as "Michigan."

I have written my letter so much at different times that I scarcely know what it contains, and it is too formidable a task to attempt to read it.—And so, my dear aunt I must bid thee good night.

Very affectionately thine,
E. M. C.

Conditioning the Farm Horse

Thousands of farm horses have been idle or roughing it during the winter months and are not ready for hard, steady work. It is now the season when the program of many a farm horse is suddenly changed without the preparation that is necessary for efficient service.

On many farms the horses have obtained their winter feed from stalk fields and the straw stack. They come through in a thin condition and need to be put in better flesh before ready for hard work. This is best done by gradually giving the horses in advance a portion of the same ration that is to be fed during the work season.

Whether the horse has been out in the open or standing idly in the barn, a moderate amount of light work preceding the rush season is advisable. The hardening process may be accomplished by changing horses each half day in doing the necessary hauling about the farm preparatory to working in the fields. This will exercise and strengthen the muscles without tiring them.

The horse will not perform efficiently in an ill-fitting harness. The raw sores that develop are due, in most instances, to plunging an idle horse suddenly into heavy work or to the fact that the harness is not properly adjusted. It is especially important that the horse collar be of the right kind, shape and size. A well-fitted collar does not choke and distributes the draft over the entire shoulder.

During the winter months most farm horses are groomed very little and the long hair of the winter coats is a handicap when spring comes. It is best to remove the old hair at once, by clipping. This is important as it increases the efficiency of the horse. It prevents the extreme sweating and lathering that would otherwise take place as the heavy work goes on and the weather becomes warm.

Due to the fact that the direct farm income is mainly from cattle, hogs, or sheep, the care of the farm horse and mule is generally neglected. It should be remembered that the income from the other classes of live stock depends upon the crops that the farm produces; and the horse furnishes the power that makes farm operations possible. More care for the work horse will in the end effect a saving and increase the efficiency on many farms. Be fair to the horse, by doing the things that will give him a good chance to give his best during the present season.

Conditions of Poultry

Recent inspections and investigations of flocks of poultry in Hillsdale County by Dr. W. H. Beck of the Federal Department of Animal Industry and J. V. Sheap, County Agricultural Agent, have brought out the fact that tuberculosis infection in flocks of poultry is greater in the county than most people realize.

While it has been known that a large number of the poultry flocks in the County were infected with tuberculosis, it was not until a number of flocks were subjected to a tuberculin test that the extent of the infection was brought out. It is now believed that fully eighty percent of all poultry flocks in the county are infected with tuberculosis. In certain sections of the county where formerly 100 to 200 fowls were kept, only a few will now be found or none at all, due to the ravages of this plague. This condition is not found on a farm here and there but whole communities will be found with a greatly diminished poultry population. The disease rapidly spreads to swine and full grown hogs have been lost with tuberculosis which has been proven to be the avain type.

Dr. Beck, and Mr. Sheap have found that in certain flocks where every bird appeared to be healthy, that reactors were found and when subjected to postmortem examination, generalized cases of tuberculosis were found. Hens were found in laying condition, containing full formed eggs, which reacted and when examined, showed tubercular lesions in liver and spleen. Hogs have been found infected with the avain type of tuberculosis on farms where the poultry was found to be tubercular. These findings prove conclusively that tuberculosis in poultry cannot be controlled by culling. In controlling the disease it has been found best to sell all of the apparently well birds as soon as the spring laying season is over and to kill and burn all suspicious looking birds. After the old flock is disposed of the poultry house should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected and all grounds where the poultry range should be dragged up. Windows should be removed from the poultry house and doors fastened open during the summer. A new flock may be started by securing baby chicks. These should be raised on ground, if possible where no stock has been raised before.

If flocks are renewed each year with pullets for a few years, and the premises cleaned up, this disease which is cutting down the profits with poultry may be checked.

The seventh oil well has just been shot at Saginaw and produces forty barrels per day so tis said, which is very tame, as it costs considerable to operate and pump these wells. It is generally figured that a 50-barrel well is a payer but anything under that is not good, as a syndicate proposition. So far as known the Saginaw wells are the only producers in the state. Of course there are the Osseo hole and Deerfield bubble which might at any time crowd the others off the map but we are not expecting it. It is now claimed that a number of North Adams speculators several years ago had already ordered Packard sedans and bought steel tanks to store the stuff in. A recent canvass of this vicinity failed to reveal any of the old shareholders in the Osseo well and one naturally wonders if they moved to Paris or London. The original promoter of the deal still resides near Osseo but at last reports he was running on low.

Villages Must Publish Council Proceedings

A bill introduced by Representative Dexter Look of Lowell, making an amendment to the general village blanket charter, makes it mandatory for all villages to publish the complete proceedings of the village common council in a newspaper published in the village if one is printed therein. The bill has passed both houses and has been signed by Governor Groesbeck.

This is a good law. There is the same necessity for the taxpayers of villages to know what their common council does as there is for the people of the county to know what the board of Supervisors does and the people of the state to know what the legislature does. There is safety for the people in publicity for the acts of their elected representatives.

In very many of the villages of Michigan proceedings of the common council have not been published, through a mistaken idea of economy or for some other reason. Now, however, all must publish their proceedings if there is a newspaper in the village. And we wouldn't give very much for a village that didn't have a newspaper; would you?

Mr. Payne Attacks Rupert Hughes' Argument

Below we are giving the contents of a circular sent out by John W. Payne of Frederic, Michigan concerning the theory of the renowned Rupert Hughes. On "American Ideals" Mr. Payne has this to to say:

"Who is Rupert Hughes?

What is his religious afflliation. if any?

What principles, if any, of true Americanism does he stand for?

It just occurs to me that he is an American Novelist from Missouri who doesn't stand for much of anything. After reading his biography it is evident that it is foolish, in a sense, to write anything in regard to his visionary argument for men and women to read, but we are thinking of the boys and girls who are also exposed and in whose hands the future of American ideals must rest.

In reading Mr. Hughes' comments on the life of Washington we should bear in mind that the Father of Our Country was born in 1732, and died in 1799. As we are aware, the educational, moral, and religious tendencies were vastly different two centuries ago. It is to be hoped that the home, the school and the church, have done something for America since Washington's time. The relaxation in moral and spiritual growth since the late war furnishes an excellent chance for men like Rupert Hughes to attempt to drag us back two centuries. For this man to suggest that George Washington should be dubbed either a mollycoddle or a milksop, if he stood for all the principles for which we have always given him credit, is an insult to true Americanism andshould cause the red blood of every real American to surge to his finger tips in righteous indignation.

We do not believe that Mr. Washington was a curser, a whiskey distiller and a gambler, even in his day, but if he were, what an alarming statement it is for Rupert Hughes to say that he thinks just as much of him for all that. While it doesn't matter much, so far as the duty of the people of the twentieth Century is coucerned as an American, I am challenging Mr. Hughes to prove his documents. Strange if true, that we haven't been informed before. As President Coolidge, with his dry smile, so aply remarked when asked for an opinion in regard to the views of Rupert Hughes, on the life of Washington, pointing out of the window behind his desk to the aluminum tip of a white marble obelisk rising heavenword more than one tenth of a mile, "The monument is still there."

Respectfully submitted, —to the Citizens of a Christian Country."

Groesbeck For Governor

Acute indication that there is an appreciation of the kind of public service that Governor Groesbeck has rendered to the people of Michigan, there is no denying. Some political spell-binder wrote a juicy article which was published in the Ionia County Sentinal, published in Fred Green's home town, and serves to illustrate the repudiative methods in use to further Green's candidacy. The handiest thing these mug-wumps can think of now is "autocrat" and "czar" but Brother Green seems to want to run We are of the opinion he will need "forty-league" boots in the race, and a real bottle of Peruna. This is the way the scribe puts it:

"Even though he is an enemy of good government, a czar of the first water, an autocrat without a rival, a destroyer of constitutional government, a genuine dare-devil, an expensive luxury, a determined close mouthed defier of all saints and reformers, an indifferent spectator to the sputterings of rival political bosses, one can't help but admire Gov. Groesbeck. Seemingly he has adopted the platform made by a great Englishman: "If you are doing work that seems to you important, waste no time in winning verbal victories or answering petty criticism—adopt this motto:"

"Never retract—Never explain, —Never apologize—Get it done and let them howl."

Groesbeck seems to have the faculty of having some enemies, which happens to all determined resolute men, and if his time is occupied doing a big job, other men's toes get stepped on occasionally. as there are many toes around.

Pheasant Eggs Supplied By State

The time for the setting of pheasant eggs is at hand. Application for the eggs should be made at once to the department of conservation at Lansing, who will furnish them without charge to farmers or sportsmen who will hatch them and release the young birds.

The average farm hen will take care of 20 eggs at a setting. For the first few days after hatching the young pheasants must be kept shut in a pen with their foster mother. This is to enable them to learn and become familiar with her clucking calls, of which of course they have no instinctive knowledge. During this period they must be fed in the same manner as young domestic chicks. Once they have learned the hen's signals they may be released with her and will fare for themselves under her guidance. They will stay with the mother, hovering under her at night for only a few weeks and once they are old enough to shift entirely for themselves they will desert her, find a roosting place for themselves and soon revert to the wild state.

This method of propagation is one of the most efficient means known of spreading and increasing the numbers of these game birds. Its use in previous years accounts in large measure for their plentitude in certain sections of the state. While considerable criticism is leveled at them the major part of it seems to be without foundation. Examination of the crops of numerous individuals indicates that they destroy sufficient weed seeds to repay the farmer for any damage they may do to his grain. As for the charge that they destroy the nests of other birds, particularly quail and are generally injurious to other bird life, hunters last autumn noted an unusual abundance of quail in the section that yielded the best pheasant shooting. The size of the coyies would indicate that the bob whites had lived almost entirely free from persecution by any natural enemies.

All in the weight of evidence seems to be in the ring necks' favor and one thing at least is sure they are a splendid game bird destined to great popularity with the hunter and promise much in the way of relief for the overshot grouse of the upstate counties.

State Fair Prospects

One of the most notable improvements of recent years, is the new $90,000 Agricultural Building to be erected on the State Fair ground at Detroit. It is the purpose of the present Agricultural Board of Directors to make the fair one of the biggest and best institutions of its kind in the middle west. Under the Dickinson regime there was considerable leakage of public monies, but since Governor Groesbeck cleaned up the management, affairs are to be run as near right as possible.

With a country newspaper publisher on the board, it is presumed the advertising end will be looked after in the best possible shape and the old-time Midway with its hundred and one interesting features will be there to welcome and entertain the crowd. There will be no catering to big Detroit concessionairres to the detriment of outside interests this season. No big valuable concessions will be given to Henry Ford or any other influential gentleman for any less than to anyone else—in short all participants will be used as near alike as possible.

No Sabbath desecration will be permitted and the grounds will not be open on Sunday as formerly. regardless of all personal benefits accruing therefrom. In short. the new board is aiming to make it a big, happy glad hand event, popular with all classes, and solely for the amusement of the populace.

Visitor's day at the Citizen's Military Training Camp at Camp Custer has been set for Friday, July 30th at which time parades, reviews and demonstrations will be given. There is still a chance for young men between the ages of 17 and 24 years of age to enroll. All expenses are paid by the Government.

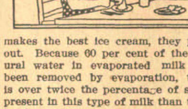
America Leads Nations In Use Of Ice Cream

If any one food may be considered as America's national dish, it is ice cream.

Ice cream is a food particularly adapted to the needs of individuals of all ages, giving as it does the best type of nutrients for the repair of bone, teeth, blood and muscles and for energy.

Today thousands of housewives make their own ice cream. As a consequence, the making of this highly nutritious food at a reduced cost, yet without in any way impairing the product, is of importance.

Home economists have found a means to this end in the use of evaporated milk. There are three important reasons why evaporated milk makes the best ice cream, they point out. Because 60 per cent of the natural water in evaporated milk has been removed by evaporation, there is over twice the percentage of solids present in this type of milk than there is in ordinary market milk—and, since it is the solids that give ice cream its pleasing flavor, this fact is of moment.

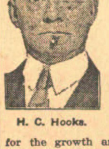


Then, the composition of evaporated milk is constant, for the reason that it has been put through an homogenizing process, which breaks up the fat globules into tiny particles and distributes them evenly throughout the milk. This attribute makes for an ice-cream mixture of uniform quality and fine texture.

Finally, experts agree that the use of evaporated milk in ice cream contributes to its hygienic qualities, for the reason that evaporated milk is entirely sterile. Health authorities declare that milk and cream should be treated to a heat of 150 degrees F. for half an hour in order that a product may be produced free from infective organisms. Evaporated milk is processed at 240 degrees for 30 minutes, and, therefore, its introduction into an ice-cream mixture increases its purity in proportion to the amount of evaporated milk used.

Milk Gives Most Food Value At Least Cost

Milk gives more food value for less cost than any other food known to man, according to Herbert C. Hooks, secretary of the Evaporated Milk association.



H. C. Hooks.

"Dietitians are unanimous in advocating the use of milk by men, women and children," said Mr. Hooks. "Milk and evaporated milk supply some of all the materials necessary for the growth and maintenance of the body; they furnish energy for work, play and warmth.

"Milk helps repair the wear and tear of the body. It is as good as meat for building muscle. Moreover, it is cheaper. A quart of milk will supply as much protein as seven ounces of sirloin steak or four large eggs. Milk, particularly evaporated milk, which has twice the mineral content of market milk, is one of the best and cheapest sources of lime, which is a form of calcium. Infants and growing children need lime to build bones and teeth. It is just as necessary for adults to keep their bones in good condition. One quart of milk, or one pint of evaporated milk, furnishes as much calcium as ten large oranges, thirty-two eggs or twenty pounds of beef. Milk also is a valuable source of phosphorus and supplies a certain amount of iron.

"By some authorities milk is said to be an aid in longevity. Dr. Herman Bundesen, health commissioner for Chicago, gives his prescription for long life as follows: Drink one quart of milk a day and mix with one hour of sunshine. Repeat ad infinitum.

"Due to the efforts of health officials to get across to the public the message of milk, its general use in the United States has advanced tremendously in the last decade. This is especially true of evaporated milk for reasons of its convenience and economy. Housewives know there is no fear of obtaining contaminated evaporated milk, because it is not only the best grade of market milk rendered double-rich by dehydrating, but it is sterilized as well."

AMERICAN YOUTH

Elizabeth ("Betty") Clark, 13, of Cedars, Delaware, is one of that state's girl candidates for the American Youth Award, established by the directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, to be held at Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in observance of 150 years of American Independence. If "Betty" is finally chosen to represent Delaware she will be given a week's trip to the Exposition and to Washington and the White House, where she will receive a medal from the hands of President Coolidge.

rials, transportation, housing, and so forth. On top of that there prevailed the demands of the Shipping Board, with the slogan that ships would win the war, and of the Food Administration, with the slogan that food would win the war. Further, there was the Railroad Administration with its need for material and labor, and finally there was the feverish quest for labor and supplies on the part of the munition makers—all competing for labor, money, materials, transportation, fuel, power, and each insisting on the greater importance of its activity. All this while the labor supply was being lessened by the flow of men into the Army.

While an endeavor was being made to bring order out of chaos, the great undertaking had to go on. Men, ships, munitions, food, material, had to be provided. Old organizations, bureaus and traditions had to be met and changed, but not destroyed until the new was set up. The wonder of it all is, not that there were so many mistakes, but that so much was accomplished.

At the time we entered the war prices were at their peak, and tending higher because of the war's insatiable demands. The problem was not alone to secure the materials and labor and to stop the confusion, but to do it in such a way that the morale of the people would be maintained. The prices of some things, like steel and copper, were fixed far below prevailing rates, and the wages of labor in those industries were standardized. The more highly organized an industry, the easier it was to arrange. Order did not commence to appear until the Army funneled its needs through one man sitting with a section of the War Industries Board and until the Navy, Shipping Board, Allies and Railroad Administration did likewise. Each department satisfied its requirements through a central authoritative body. This was called the War Industries Board, controlling and directing all materials and co-ordinating through its chairman the whole system of governmental and civilian supply and demand. It was created by executive order in March of the year 1918.

Briefly, this board endeavored to mobilize the industries of America so that the fighting forces of the Allied and associated nations could draw from the United States—the last reservoir of men, materials and money—the things needed for the winning of the war at the time the things were needed and with the least dislocation of industry and the least disturbance of the civilian population.

II

The War Industries Board was organized like any other supervisory committee, with a chairman, vice chairman, members in charge of various activities, bureau chiefs and subordinate workers. It surveyed and sought to arrange the whole industrial war field under the plenary powers conferred by the President and the Congress. How well it did this is a story for others to tell. What it did is the basis of the plan I am here drawing.

It was comparatively easy to fix prices and to distribute materials, and indeed to stabilize the wages of labor in those industries in which prices were fixed. The labor situation, however, became increasingly difficult, particularly when General Crowder found it necessary to withdraw men for the proposed campaign of 1919 after 4,000,000 soldiers had already been taken.

Much has been said about the profiteering of labor. It is an unjust accusation. It is only fair to say that this condition was primarily brought about through the inexperience of the organization within our own governmental departments and by the furious bidding of munitions makers and ship builders for services. That situation, together with the increased prices of the things that labor had to buy with the results of its work, made it inevitable that labor must get higher wages.

So it became evident that the price fixing program had to go even further, and the War Industries Board, when the Armistice came, was proceeding with a campaign to fix the prices of all the basic things that labor had to buy. Some had previously been fixed. I speak of labor in a much broader sense than manual labor, for the unorganized so-called "white collar" part of our community—clerks, teachers, government employees, professional men—were less able to meet the situation than labor in the narrower sense. For the protection and relief of such groups certain plans were devised. To illustrate—

The VALLEY of VOICES

"My friends, we have worked together to drive from this valley the man who would destroy the Indians. We have won. He has gone. You have toiled, you have kept your promises and obeyed orders. You will take to your families what food and trade-goods your dogs can pull. Also, there is much fur in the loft, for which Laflamme paid the Ojibways in whisky. This the government will take, if it remains here. But it belongs to the Indians. You shall have it to divide equally among the hunters of this valley, but first it must be taken to the fork of the Stooping and cached. I am going on the long trail to Fort Albany. When I return I will meet you at the cache, divide the fur among you, and tell you where you are to take it to be traded—to Wailing River or to Fort Hope, of the old company.

"In the loft we have found the fur that was lost this summer with the canoe on the lower river. Laflamme murdered the crew and stole the fur, to drive the honest trader, St. Onge, from this valley. This morning it goes back to him. Will you cache the rest of the fur at the Stooping and wait for my return from Albany?"

"E-nh, yes!" The Ojibways, delighted with their sudden wealth, readily agreed, surprised that the man who had caught the Windigo reserved nothing for himself.

The following morning, as Michel and Steele watched the last sled fade from sight on the white surface of Ogoke, bound with fur for the fork of the Stooping, a moving spot on the snow, far to the west, attracted their attention.

"It can't be David, so soon?" queried the American.

Steele went into the trade-house and returned with his binoculars.

"There seem to be two sleds," he said, adjusting the glasses. "The drivers are riding. I can't make them out. They may be police." He handed the glasses to Michel.

For a long time the Indian studied the distant spots on the snow. Then he said, drily. "Onlee one man—odder team hitch to front sled. Dogs tired." He returned the glasses to his chief, with a look which aroused Steele's curiosity.

"You think it's David, after all?"

"I t'ink," nodded the Indian.

The two men returned to the kitchen. The man who had spent two nights and a day on the trail would appreciate a warm breakfast. When they again looked down the lake, the familiar, blocky figure of David was urging the exhausted teams from the tail of the second sled. Shortly, the dogs turned into the post. Then the curious men who hailed with a shout the return of the Ojibway, saw, lashed to the pack on the rear sled, two rifles in skin cases.

In silence the two gripped the hand of the one who had left in the night on his grim quest—faithful to an oath and a memory.

To their questioning eyes he answered: "My brudder—he sleep soun' last night."

That was all. But Steele and Michel knew that somewhere on the Rouge river trail, two men had paid—somewhere, two bodies lay stiff in the snow.

CHAPTER XIX

All Wailing River, women and children, were on the river ice to welcome the return of the men who had saved the trade. Leaving the chattering Indians, as the dogs, brave with bells and colored worsted, jingled down the trail, St. Onge hurried to meet his friends.

"My friends!" he choked, powerless to continue. Then, "My brave comrades! I can never repay you—but I will not forget."

Steele's eager eyes searched the group at the shore for a straight figure in fur coat and hood—then found her standing with the women. As the people surrounded the dog-teams, congratulating Michel and David, she came to meet him.

The sharp air had driven the blood to her cheeks. In the mink hood, her face had never so appealed to him as when she laughed up, with: "The conqueror returns for his triumph! Welcome, Monsieur Steele!" Then her dark eyes went grave. "We owe you everything—everything," she said, lowering her voice. "Thank you, oh, so much, for what you have done for my father."

"But—for you?" he protested. "You know—it was for you?"

She met his gaze frankly. "I thank you—for myself."

"You have been well?" he asked, chilled by the reserve in her level eyes. "The violin—Jacques brought word—I am so sorry."

"Yes, you would know what its loss has meant. But your catching the Windigo—surrounding them—driving them from Ogoke through fear! It was wonderful, monsieur. And David is with you? The Indians told us he had left in pursuit of Laflamme—he—"

"Yes, David's account is settled," said Steele, quietly.

The girl shuddered.

"The future of the post is safe," Steele went on. "We have much to be thankful for—finding that lost fur. Your father will show a big profit this year. Montreal will not allow the post to be closed now."

He watched her face closely.

"Father wept at the news—it was wonderful," she calmly replied, as if ignorant of how great moment to her own fortunes was the rehabilitation of Wailing River.

She had not changed; nothing would move her. She would go through with it, notwithstanding the assured independence of her father. She would keep her contract. That was clear. If she cared, she would have shown it there, on the river, when she met him. But she still believed he had been disloyal—made love to another woman, on his way home in October. Her pride had killed forever what she had felt for him that morning on the river shore.

At the trade-house he found Michel and David, narrating in detail the history of the campaign against the Windigo and Ogoke.

"It is unbelievable, my dear Steele," said St. Onge, "and I owe you and Michel a humble apology. I could not believe that Tete-Boule was dangerous—a spy. For me to leave her here at the mercy of Laflamme was unthinkable—and the violin! Poor girl, that was the final blow."

"It was uncanny—the way you three men caught Pierre and paid them with their own medicine. I can't believe now that it isn't all a dream. And this fur of Laflamme's, you say it is cached up river?" The Frenchman was puzzled.

Steele nodded.

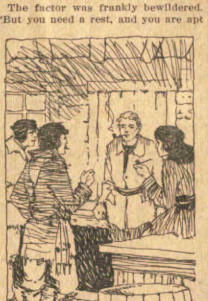
"And you are to divide it among the Indians later?"

"Yes, when I return from Albany."

"From Albany? You are going to Albany?"

"Yes, David and I start tomorrow."

The factor was frankly bewildered. "But you need a rest, and you are apt to run right into a Keewatin northwester at this time, monsieur," objected St. Onge. What Steele's mission was he did not ask.



"It Is Unbelievable, My Dear Steele," Said St. Onge.

"Our dogs are good for it. We'll take six and go light. You can count on seeing us inside of three weeks."

"But why not send Michel and David? You do not flatter the poor hospitality of Wailing River when you give us but a night. I've looked forward so to your return—and now you are leaving us," protested the mystified factor.

"It is a personal matter," said Steele, "and is urgent. We start at daylight."

* * * * * * * * *

After reeling off the last miles of the lower Albany on an ice-hard trail, the swift dogs of Steele trotted up to the building of the Revillon Freres at the mouth of the river, two days before New Year's.

Leaving David to protect the team, Steele entered the trade-room. At the counter a half-breed clerk was busy with a hunter, but beyond, occupied at a desk, sat the man he had come three hundred miles to see.

At Steele's "Good afternoon, monsieur!" the trader looked up from his work. Slowly, as he recognized the frost-burned features of the man in duffle capote, the face of Lascelles went black with anger. He rose and faced the newcomer, his mouth twitching in vain effort to articulate.

"You remember me," went on Steele, casually, openly amused at the surprise and discomfiture of the other. "My name is Steele. I met you at Wailing River."

"Yes, I remember you," exploded the inspector, finding his voice. "What brings you here?"

"I came on a little matter of business which we had better discuss in private," suggested Steele, nodding in the direction of the listening clerk.

"Come in behind the counter, then."

Steele passed to the rear of the counter and sat down.

"You come from Moose or Wailing River?" demanded Lascelles, curious of the purpose of this strange call in midwinter.

"I come from Wailing River. You may be interested to know what has happened in the valley since September."

Lascelles was interested. "You brought letters for me?" His tone dropped its surliness.

"Oh, no! I have no letters, Mademoiselle St. Onge and her father are well, however. In fact, St. Onge is a happy man. He's got the fur he lost last summer at the big rapids."

"Got his fur? How?"

"Why, Laflamme had it. By the way, the trade of the valley is in your hands. Wailing River will pay big in the future." Steele added pointedly: "You can't close the post now."

"But Laflamme? He stole that fur?" demanded the astonished and mystified Frenchman. "How did St. Onge get it back?"

"Why, Laflamme bequeathed it to him—sort of a legacy. You see, Laflamme died—with a few others."

Lascelles stared at the man across the desk as if he doubted Steele's reason. "Laflamme dead! What's happened?" he gasped.

"Well, in the first place," began Steele, lighting his pipe, "the Windigo you scoffed at proved to be an Indian from Ogoke. We got him in a bear-trap—then closed in on Laflamme and picked up half his people on the trails. When we walked in the rest had already stampeded from sheer fright. We missed Laflamme by minutes." The American enjoyed the play of mingled incredulity and amazement on the features of the man he faced. "He was found strangled on the Rouge river trail—later," Steele added. "A private affair, I imagine. Exit all competition in the valley for St. Onge."

"It's unbelievable—Laflamme dead. And his fur? It will come, of course, to Wailing River," added the trader, with satisfaction.

The moment of the American had arrived. He deliberately knocked out his pipe, as he countered: "That depends on whether you sign this." The speaker fumbled in an inner pocket and produced an oil-skin envelope with an enclosure.

"What is this?" he demanded, his small eyes shifting suspiciously from the paper to the cold gaze of the American.

"This is your title to forty thousand dollars' worth of fur, your title—when you sign it and return it to me."

"I'll read it to you," continued Steele.

"Mademoiselle Denise St. Onge:

"I hereby release you from your agreement to marry me.

"GEORGES LASCELLES,

"Inspector, Revillon Freres, Albany District."

"You dare to insult me in my own house!" raged the furious trader, getting to his feet and shaking his fists in the face of the man who sat coolly in his chair, looking up at him. "Why—you impudent scoundrel—I'll have you thrown out of the place—you and your dogs! You—" Lascelles, choked with anger, was unable to continue.

"You forget my man David," drawled Steele, "the Indian who laughed at you on the shore. You haven't got enough Swampy Crees at your post here to throw that Ojibway out."

"Now, sit down!" snapped Steele. "At the Stooping River there is forty thousand dollars in fur under guard of my men. Sign this, and it goes to St. Onge; refuse, and it will be traded at Fort Hope, with the Hudson's Bay. Understand? Forty thousand in fur to the Hudson's Bay!"

"Did she send you with this?" sneered the patently worried inspector.

"We won't discuss Mademoiselle St. Onge, but she knows nothing of this—nothing. Furthermore, you may be glad to learn that this release will mean nothing to me. We have both lost, Lascelles—both you and I. Let's take our medicine like men."

"You expect me to believe you?"

"Believe me or not, one thing you're going to do; that is, sign this release."

"Suppose I refuse?"

"Well, read this." Steele handed the other man a paper bearing the letterhead of Revillon Freres and dated at Montreal.

Lascelles' hand visibly trembled as he took the paper. While he read, his high color slowly died.

"You understand that second sentence, don't you?" taunted Steele. "'Any attempt on your part to confuse the company's business with your private affairs will be summarily dealt with,'" he quoted. "How would you like to have the Montreal office learn that you had, for private reasons, turned over forty thousand dollars' worth of pelts to the Hudson's Bay?"

Limp in his chair, the man who had plotted for Denise St. Onge and beheld his victory near, now stared hopelessly on defeat. To Steele, confident of the answer—the answer which was inevitable from the character of the man he dealt with—the face of Lascelles reflected each stage of his mental struggle. Deep as had been his obsession for Denise St. Onge, his commercial future was his life. After an interval, he turned to the American.

"I could have you put out of the way easily, in spite of your man-killer outside; and get both fur and the girl."

Steele laughed. "You think me a child? If I don't come back, the fur goes to Fort Hope. I've fixed that. I've also written to your superiors telling them of your great fur haul on the Wailing. However, I'm hungry for a good fight. Say the word and I'll begin with you. Any more threats?"

Lascelles was done. There was no alternative to a refusal to sign the release but the ruin of his career. He hurriedly wrote his name and returned the paper to Steele.

"You're a clever man, monsieur," he said in a voice broken with passion, "but in the future keep away from this end of the Albany. It would please me to look at you over the sights of a rifle."

"Now, I don't feel that way about you," flung back Steele as he moved to the door, followed by the venomous eyes of the other. "While I have a foot, I'll never waste good ammunition—on a cur," and he slammed the door behind him.

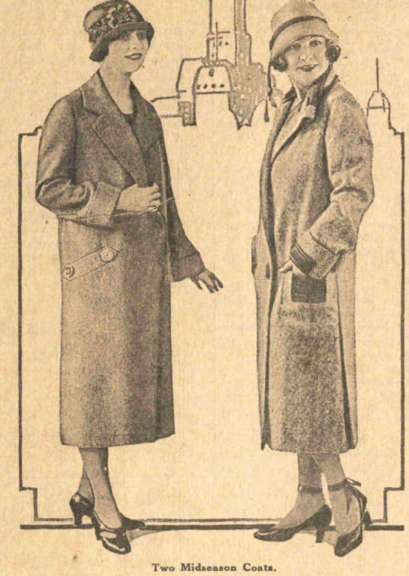
FOR TRAVEL AND SPORTS; NEW HEADWEAR ATTRACTS

AN ATTRACTIVE company of summer coats, the latest (and last) offerings of the current season, are making their entry. These new arrivals have "travel," "pastimes" and "vacation" expressed in their designing as plainly as if they bore placards with the printed words and they include some novel, semiformal types that are unusually interesting.

For midsummer there are unlined cape-coats of light-colored flannels and similar coats of crepe-satin in light colors. A little heavier than these are the sleeveless coats, with capes that wrap about the arms at the front. These are made of lightweight materials and lined with thin silk; polka-dot silks or other printed patterns, used for lining, also serve to make a long scarf to be wrapped about the throat. These may be classed as semi-sports styles and are all attractive and practical. But cheerful colors are not confined to pastime coats; they appear, in deeper tones, in tweeds and homespuns, among the usual mixtures and neutral colors. This innovation in color, with short detachable capes that are buttoned about small, high collars, on some models, and hoods attached at the back on others, are outstanding new features in midseason styles.

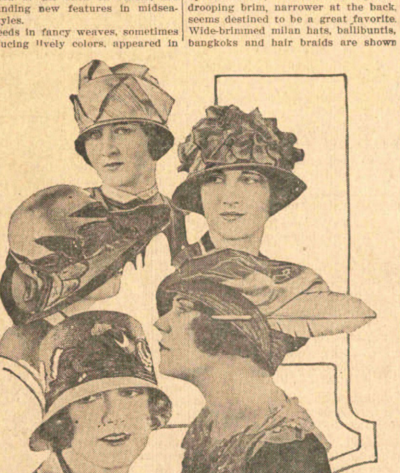


Two Midseason Coats.

Tweeds in fancy weaves, sometimes introducing lively colors, appeared in coats and suits early in the season and have been well received. A coat made of this new type of tweed mixture is shown at the right of the two models illustrated and is a smart garment for travel and general wear. It has emplacements of smooth-surfaced cloth on the collar, pockets and sleeves. For those who like mannish types the coat at the left is shown. It is a swagger affair, in blue and gray, or other mixtures, and is as plain as possible.

The pendulum of fashion which finally swung to the extreme of simple and unimportant styles in winter millinery started in an opposite direction this spring. It is rapidly traveling now away from uniform and uninteresting headwear in the direction of individual and more complicated style in hats that express personality as well as cover heads. It is remarkable that the most important item in the costume should ever have been so neglected, and when we finally arrived at the place where women of all types and ages wore exactly the same kinds of hats we woke to the meaninglessness of our headwear.

In the group of five hats pictured here we have examples of real millinery art as it flourishes today. Each hat differs from the others and each reveals the work of an artist—a French artist of acknowledged genius for designing. From them we can gather the high-lights of the new modes—the higher crowns, the introduction of wide brims, the combinations of straw braid and millinery fabrics in the construction of shapes, the revival of flower and feather trimmings. This millinery is worthy to be worn by women of importance.



Some of the New Millinery.

The group does not include some prominent additional shapes and styles brought out for midsummer. Among these the square-crowned Spanish sailor, with either straight or drooping brim, narrower at the back, seems destined to be a great favorite. Wide-brimmed milan hats, ballibuntls, bangkoks and hair braids are shown in quantities and in varied shapes. Crocheted straw hats in the smaller, close-fitting shapes are favorites for the street and for traveling and combinations of straw and silk, so soft that they can be conveniently carried in a suitcase are in a class by themselves and are called "luggage hats." The two more important developments of the modes in millinery are the increased demand for straw hats and hair braids and the ever widening brims. In the latter particular indications are that fashion will go to extremes by the time midsummer arrives.

Evening Capes of White Fur

White caracul evening capes are worn by fashionables this season. One no longer feels the call for ermine or costly furs at evening time. Many of the best families are appearing in white rabbit. Thus caracul is not to be sniffed at.

If You Wear a Hat

Very wide delft blue belting ribbon is used to fashion some of the smartest hats for spring. Helmet shapes, berettas or bolero toques are effectively made of this wide ribbon and need no trimming. This bright blue goes well with navy or with black, and is sometimes effectively combined with gray.

Black and Brilliants

Black for evening is the latest word from Paris and black chiffon dance frocks are worn by the smartest women. One frock is covered with glittering brilliants so attached as to give the effect of a pattern. There is no other decoration.

School at Gettysburg Was Battle Hospital

The building that housed the first classical school west of the Susquehanna river is still standing in Gettysburg, Pa., says the Baltimore Sun. The ivy-covered stone building, known as the Dobbin house, was erected in 1774 by Rev. Alexander Dobbin, a native of Ireland, who came to this country in 1773.

For more than thirty years, Mr. Dobbin conducted his school and many men, who later became prominent public citizens, were scholars. Early in the Nineteenth century the Dobbin school failed for some reason not recorded.

During the battle of Gettysburg the Dobbin house was used as an emergency field hospital, being at the edge of the fighting area. Men of both sides were cared for in the building. A spring of water in the basement was the mecca for hundreds of soldiers while the battle raged. Several families now occupy the property.

Wives and Husbands

In "Wives," by Gamaliel Bradford, the author discusses seven famous women made famous only by famous husbands. The women are Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, Mrs. Benedict Arnold, Theodosia Burr, Mrs. James Blaine, Mrs. Jefferson Davis, Mrs. Benjamin Butler, Mrs. James Madison. The author contends that each of these wives was the intellectual superior of her husband. What's the answer? Women prefer to submerge self in mate even if they can outshine him?

Fraternity members advise one another concerning "easy" courses and "easy" Profs. and what certain Profs. like and certain ones dislike. Several boys who couldn't get into any fraternity at the U of Wisconsin organized one of their own and invited an elderly professor to join them. North Adams won the county championship in baseball Tuesday by beating Waldron in an eleven inning game. North Adams made five runs in the first inning and it looked as if they would win handily Waldron then settled down and held them to three runs until the last of the eighth and in the mean time were able to count twice themselves. In the ninth with the score 8-6 against them Waldron staged a rally that tied the score and it looked for awhile as if they had the necessary punch to win. North Adams was able to hold them for two more innings until the heavy end of the batting order came up again and in the last part of the eleventh inning were able to put over the winning run.

Two PROSPECTS

Hon. FRED GREEN

Mayor of Ionia

Wants to be Governor of Michigan. Has served in politics successfully for several years, and thinks he can snatch the toga from Alexander Groesbeck. By means of the Quaker Oats smirk Green expects to do up his opponent in Brown. Fred won't make it, but he needs the practice.

Hon. JOE HOOPER

Representative 3rd District

Joe always was a handy man—the other day they needed a substitute in the speaker's chair during a consideration of the farmer's Relief Bill, and Joe put on his best manners and went up and swung the gavel to the intense satisfaction of the whole bunch. The result was that Hooper stands a head taller in influence and can qualify for old Joe Cannon's job.

Obituary

Mrs. Nellie Gray, daughter of Alonzo Lewis of New York and Martha Lewis of Vermont, passed away at Ann Arbor May 27, following an operation and an illness of twelve weeks at the age of nearly sixty years. She was married to Will Gray Aug. 13, 1884 and to this union were born five children; Carl of Cincinnati Ohio, Judd of North Adams, the others dying in infancy.

Besides her husband, Will Gray and her sons, she leaves three brothers, Judd Lewis of Hillsdale Michigan, Will Lewis of San Diego, California and Fred Lewis of Quincy, Michigan and also leaves scores of friends who loved and respected her.

She was a most faithful wife and mother to the last. She bore the burdens of this life without a murmur. She had implicit faith in her future life as shown by a clipping recently taken from a newspaper and found in her purse after her soul had passed into the great unknown, which follows:

"What we call "death" is in fact release from the limitations of earth. While we grieve for those who have gone ahead, and long to have them back, we rejoice for them that they are free from the trials and burdens of this mortal life"

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon May 30th, at the home at 2:30 p. m. Rev. Virgil Hunt officiating and interment i the North Adams cemetery.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Storm Raised in Congress by President's New Order for Dry Enforcement.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S executive order authorizing the appointment of state, county and municipal officers as prohibition agents at nominal salary has raised a great storm in congress, and on Tuesday the senate decided its judiciary committee should conduct an inquiry into the legality of the order, "to enable the senate to determine whether legislation is advisable or necessary" in connection with the enforcement policy it embodies. The resolution directing this inquiry was introduced by Senator King of Utah, a dry, who said the order was unauthorized by congress or any state legislature and "appeared to be of dubious legality." Senator Robinson of Arkansas, minority leader and an ardent dry, denounced the order as executive usurpation and a serious blow to state rights and to prohibition itself. And naturally the wets in the senate, led by Edge of New Jersey, did not overlook the opportunity.

In the lower house Mr. Coolidge's action caused almost as great a rumpus. Britten of Illinois and Hill of Maryland introduced resolutions to prevent the order from being put into effect, and Linthicum of Maryland made a warm speech in which he declared the order was centralization gone mad. He and others called attention to the contrast between the President's order and the warnings he uttered in his recent Williamsburg speech of the danger of federal encroachments on the sovereignty of the states. The Republicans had said that in that address he had forestalled the raising of the state rights issue by the Democrats in 1928, and now some of them feel that he has lost the ground he then gained. The Democrats assert that his actions do not square with his professions.

Mr. Coolidge was seemingly surprised by the storm of criticism that met his order. On his behalf it was explained that it was issued at the request of General Andrews, chief prohibition enforcer, and was designed especially to cope with a situation that had arisen in California. There was no intention of applying it generally or in any state where such dual holding of office is forbidden by law. Attorney General Sargent has held that the order is legal, but Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has said he would not have indorsed it if he had known it was to meet with such opposition. White House spokesmen said it never occurred to Mr. Coolidge that the order would be attacked as an invasion of state rights, for the reason that in the eighteenth amendment the states have invited, and in his opinion commanded, the federal government to share the concurrent enforcement of national prohibition. When the states invited the federal government into what had, theretofore, been their exclusive jurisdiction, the federal government could hardly be called a trespasser, according to the President's reasoning.

IN HIS speech attacking the executive order Senator Robinson gave the wets occasion for joy by this statement:

"There has been considerable discussion on both sides of this chamber as to whether prohibition enforcement has failed so completely as to justify such radical measures as amendment of the Constitution or modification of the Volstead act. A referendum on the question has been proposed. Passing over the constitutionality of the proposal, I am mo[illegible]d to say that the course of events [illegible]nding to compel those who favo[illegible]ition to consent to a referen[illegible]here are some states in [illegible]is widespread wet senti[illegible] taking steps for s[illegible]my opinion ther[illegible]tes which mig[illegible] on such a [illegible] the states [illegible] who is a [illegible] dry as they make them, thought it not unlikely the Volstead act might be modified by congress. "Some of us drys," said he, "might concede that the act overshoots the eighteenth amendment."

ADMINISTRATION senators who are candidates for renomination and who are listed as drys got another jolt in the Oregon primaries, for the Republicans of that state rejected Senator Stanfield and gave the nomination to Frederick Steiwer of Pendleton, a lawyer and wheat grower. Stanfield formerly was considered a liberal on the liquor question but has become a militant dry. Steiwer, though indorsed by the Anti-Saloon league, also was backed by certain organizations that have a leaning toward wetness.

CONSTRUCTION of post offices and other government buildings to cost $165,000,000 during the next five years is provided for in the public buildings bill signed last week by the President. The measure specifically provides that $50,000,000 shall be spent for new buildings in the District of Columbia, $100,000,000 for new buildings throughout the country, and $15,000,000 for the completion of projects already authorized. The secretary of the treasury is to submit to congress when it convenes each year a list of estimates for the construction of needed buildings, distributing the money among the states fairly on a basis of area, population and postal receipts.

THE Haugen farm relief bill was defeated in the house by a vote of 167 to 212, and though Senator Cummins of Iowa did not support the administration in its opposition to the measure, the result is said to be reacting against him in the Iowa primary campaign. Letters from Mr. Haugen declaring that Mr. Cummins has been indefatigable in his aid of measures advocated by the corn-belt leaders are being broadcast, but still the farmers are represented as being grouchy. Chief of the senator's opponents for the nomination is Smith W. Brookhart, who was unseated in favor of Dan Steck, Democrat. His main argument in his campaign speeches is that he was robbed of his seat and that thereby the voters of Iowa were disfranchised. All in all, however, it was predicted last week that the veteran Cummins would win a renomination.

DELEGATES from the United States and 18 Latin-American countries and representatives from Europe and Asia assembled in Washington for the second Pan-American Red Cross conference. President Coolidge opened the proceedings with a graceful speech in which he gave the highest praise to the Red Cross societies of the world for their work in alleviating human suffering and in preparing the peoples of the world for international peace.

IN THE Geneva preliminary conference on disarmament considerable progress was made. The delegates decided, at the suggestion of M. Boncour of France, to urge the council of the League of Nations to speed up its machinery that is designed to terminate hostilities quickly. Hugh Gibson, American delegate, did his part by declaring, in the course of a debate on the desirability of exercising some sort of control over the armaments of participating nations, that his delegation would not present any obstacle to a discussion of armament problems which might have League of Nations aspects, though of course the Americans could not participate in such discussions.

Hungary submitted a memorandum to the commission complaining bitterly that, though she was practically disarmed, she is surrounded by a group of allied countries possessing powerful military forces—meaning the little entente. She gave warning that unless some general reduction of armament materialized Europe and the League of Nations would be gravely endangered. This protest is similar to one already made by Count von Bernstorff on behalf of Germany. Representatives of the little entente protested against the tenor of the Hungarian document, declaring it was virtually a petition for the revision of the treaty of Trianon, which, they contended, had no place in the deliberations of the disarmament commission.

ABD-EL-KRIM, leader of the Riffians, having lost his headquarters town of Targuist and being abandoned by many of his supporters, has given up the fight against the French and Spaniards. He made some peace proposals last week that were rejected by the French on the ground that he was merely playing for time, and the chieftain thereupon surrendered to the French, putting his person, his family and his property under their protection. Previous to this he returned all the French, Spanish and native prisoners who had been held in the Riff. It was said by Paris officials that Krim would be treated "with generosity but with prudence," which means he will be exiled from the Riff but maintained in suitable state.

MRS. JOHN D. SHERMAN, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in her annual report to the convention of the federation in Washington, said that the specific objective of her presidential regime was the improvement of the American home so that "our people might be turned from their sad flight after irresponsible pleasure to a lasting satisfaction found in ideal life." Her recommendations included the establishment of a "General Federation Foundation" fund for special work; creation of a permanent federation board of trustees; an organized body of law observance and law administration for all departments, and support of legislation "in principle" rather than in the letter of the bill. About 5,000 women attended the convention. Mrs. Sherman and Mrs. Edward Franklin White of Indianapolis, first vice president, were re-elected. The new officers are Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole of Brockton, Mass., recording secretary, and Mrs. H. G. Reynolds of Paducah, Ky., treasurer.

CROWN PRINCE ADOLPHUS and Crown Princess Louise of Sweden with their large suite landed in New York Thursday and went immediately to Washington for the unveiling of the memorial to John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor. They are receiving all fitting official and social attentions and plan to make a tour of the country before returning home.

MT. TOKAICHI, a long quiescent volcano on Hokkaido island, Japan, suddenly erupted with disastrous results. Streams of lava poured over the countryside and there were numerous landslides. Hundreds of farmers were believed to have perished and at least one village was wiped out. A little later the Mayama Irregato reservoir in the Akita prefecture of northern Japan, burst its banks and swept away half of the town of Kitsura. The town had a population of 7,000 and it is feared that the casualty list may be heavy.

ACCORDING to a report just issued by the federal trade commission, the national wealth of the United States amounted to $353,000,000,000 in 1922, an apparent increase in the ten-year period of 72 per cent, but only 16 per cent when allowance is made for changes in the purchasing power of the dollar.

National income of the United States is estimated at $70,000,000,000 for the year 1923, which is somewhat less than the total in 1920, when it was $75,000,000,000, but more than in 1921, when, during that year of depression, it dropped to $53,000,000,000.

MARSHAL PILSUDSKI seems to have decided that Poland needs a dictatorship for about a year to give the national assembly time to revise the constitution. The election of a new President has been postponed for some days and the marshal himself apparently has consented to be one of the candidates. In order to impress the country with the fact that he had no intention of setting up a military dictatorship, Pilsudski ordered five regiments to leave Warsaw for their provincial garrisons. Americans who are engaged in extensive financial deals with the Polish government are much dissatisfied, and Minister Stetson suggested to Foreign Minister Valeski that America be kept better informed concerning the government of Poland and its plans.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lansing—Three members of the Michigamme township school board have been ordered removed from office by Thomas E. Johnson, superintendent of public instruction, it has been announced. They were charged with misappropriating schools funds.

Harrison—City officials here have been notified that President Coolidge has signed the bill which relinquishes the right, title and interest in a small island in Budd lake owned by the United States to the city for park purposes. The island will cost the city less than $1.25, as it is smaller than an acre.

Pontiac—Condemnation proceedings have been authorized by the city commission, with a view to obtaining sufficient land on South Saginaw street to permit widening that thoroughfare from Jackson street to South boulevard to 120 feet, to conform with the Wider Woodward pavement. The street is 66 feet wide.

Flint—Flint taxpayers have approved a proposal to bond the city for $522,000 for the construction of the first unit of a sewage disposal plant, the final steps in a construction program covering 10 years to free the Flint river of pollution. The city has been ordered by the Circuit court to complete the work by the first of next year.

Kalamazoo—Judge Edward J. Moinet has signed a formal decree ordering repayment to 28 plaintiffs in the Michigan-Colorado Copper Mining company case of approximately $50,000, which it is declared they invested in stock of the now defunct company. The signing of the decree followed a settlement of its terms in accordance with an opinion recently filed by Judge Moinet, by attorneys on both sides and by the court.

Ann Arbor—Several hundred manufacturers of the state gathered here May 27 for a meeting with members of the engineering department of the University of Michigan to hold a practical discussion on the relation of scientific research to industry. Industrial committees were appointed through which it is hoped more complete co-operation between industry and the research department of the university will be attained.

Escanaba—Representatives of 11 of the county boards of supervisors of the Upper Peninsula met recently in Escanaba to discuss plans for financing an intensive nation-wide advertising campaign promoting the peninsula as a summer playground. It is proposed that the maximum amounts which legally can be raised by tax levies for advertising purposes and sums collected from private interests and municipalities be placed in a single central fund.

Owosso—The Michigan Electric Railway company has notified the city commission here and the Corunna city council that it will abandon service in and between the two towns and tear up its rails. The company said the line has been a losing venture and that it could no longer comply with the requirements of its franchise. Bus service will be substituted for the street cars. The buses will be operated by the Owosso-Flint Bus Line, Inc., an Owosso company.

Wayne—Following the recent visit of J. B. Pengelly, chairman of the city planning board of Flint, to Wayne concerted action by civic officials, clubs and organizations and the Wayne district association has been taken toward adoption of a definite plan of city planning for the community. Tentative proposals are being drafted and will be submitted to the village commission within a few weeks as the foundation of a general movement to mold the growth of the village, it is said.

River Rouge—River Rouge cannot pay its bill for water amounting to $24,991, rendered by the Detroit water board, due to the fact that no funds remain in the treasury for this purpose and taxes will not come in before July 15. As a result, George H. Fenkell, superintendent of the Detroit water plant, will make some suggestions for improving the financing of the sale of water in River Rouge. That city now pays more money for water than it is charging the residents to whom it is resold, Fenkell said.

Lansing—Petitions prepared at the suggestion of Frank F. Rogers, State Highway Commissioner, has been filed with the Michigan Public Utilities Commission charging that freight rates on gravel, crushed rock and sand hauled in the state are excessive. It is felt that the lowering of freight rates would aid in lessening the cost of materials used on Michigan roads. The gravel men have complained of high freight rates and charged these rates, if lowered, would enable them to sell their product more cheaply.

Holland—The "Pageant of 1926 by the senior class of Hope college May 31 and June 2 and 5, will be the biggest production ever staged in western Michigan. There will be 400 characters. The production will cost more than $3,000 and it is to be staged on the campus, which will be fenced off. Elaborate fire works have been received and large loud speakers are to be installed. The pageant is to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the declaration of independence, the founding of Holland in 1846 and Hope college in 1866.

Pontiac—Initial work on the Oakland county section of the Stephenson superhighway was begun May 24, according to announcement by Oakland County Road Engineer Leon V. Belknap. Work started at the Eleven-Mile road and will be continued through the Nine and Half-Mile road and Eight-Mile road. The highway runs straight north from Detroit to Big Beaver. It is hoped to complete the project this summer. When completed this highway is expected to be second only to the wider Woodward project.

Saginaw—Knights of Columbus of Michigan, at the close of their annual convention here, named Detroit as the 1927 meeting city. Alpena petitioned for the convention in 1928 and Grand Rapids offered to entertain the state delegates in 1929.

Romeo—Walter Yale Durand, 52 years old, formerly first assistant chief economist of the United States Federal Trade commission and widely recognized authority on coal and other commodities died at Washington May 25. He was born here.

Grand Rapids—Bids for operation of commercial air mail service between Grand Rapids and Detroit have been called for by Postmaster General New. Mail service between the two cities will only take an hour by air, New said. The bids are returnable in 30 days.

Grand Rapids—Irving Hansen, 15 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hansen of Stanton, is in a critical condition in a hospital here, his skull fractured. The boy was hit on the head accidentally with a baseball bat by Charles Miller, a playmate, during a game between school hours.

Kalamazoo — Grand Rapids was chosen as the 1927 Masonic convention city by the grand lodge of Michigan, in annual convention here. The convention was attended by more than 1,000 delegates and visitors and more business was transacted than at any meeting in several years, it is said.

Pontiac — The largest commencement exercises ever held by eighth grade graduates in Oakland county schools were held in the Oakland theatre, Saturday, May 29. A class of 319 received certificates. Dr. Ernest Burnham, state director of rural education, delivered the commencement address.

Flint—Henry B. Marks, 53, of Chicago, manager of the "Home Complete Exposition," now being staged in this city, and an electrician, Eddie Cantrell, 31, of San Jose, Calif., were accidentally electrocuted May 25. Marks had attempted to draw Cantrell away from a live wire of high voltage. Both men died instantly.

Bay City—A radio ordinance, tabled by the city commission several weeks ago, probably will be taken up again by that body. A number of radio dealers and "fans" are urging adoption of the regulations provided in the ordinance, which would improve reception conditions. Circuit Judge Samuel G. Houghton leads the committee of radio enthusiasts.

Adrian—The state public utilities commission has authorized the capitalization of the Citizens' Gas Fuel company, of Adrian. The action completes the reorganization of the old Lenawee control and operation of the Doherty interests of New York City. The company plans to spend about $100,000 in the reconstruction and modernizing of the system.

Monroe—Bids will be opened here June 7 by the state highway department for paving West Elm avenue. The section to be paved is a half mile long and 30 feet wide. The state will pay for paving 20 feet of this and the city the other 10. It is expected the cost will be $50,000. The new paving will give Monroe another outlet to M-10 to the west.

Grand Rapids—James Higgins, 32 years old, former city fireman, pleaded guilty to a liquor possession charge and was sentenced to serve 60 days, although two gallons of "evidence" in the case has disappeared at police headquarters. The court asked Higgins whether he could solve the mystery, Higgins denied any knowledge of what became of the confiscated liquor.

Ypsilanti—Darwin Bailey, 18 years old, of Cass City, a student at the normal college here, lost his right hand and received other serious injuries as a result, it is believed, of "hooking" a ride on a D. U. R. freight train from Ann Arbor to Ypsilanti, May 24. He is now in the Beyer Memorial hospital here where physicians say he has a chance for recovery. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Bailey of Cass City.

Owosso—Police here are holding W. I. Gilliman, 38 years old, no home, who insists he is a human radio receiving set. He said in the morning he gets stations in Europe and in the afternoon he gets them all over the world. He will be "hooked up," he told officers, June 3. He also claimed to be a mind reader, but fell down when asked to read the mind of Judge R. S. Day. No charge has been made against him.

Port Huron—The state highway department has promised W. W. Cox, St. Clair county highway engineer and Frank Beard, county road commissioner that it will construct 9.7 miles of concrete highway on state trunk line M-27, the river road leading from Port Huron to Detroit. This will mean that, with the exception of a short stretch near St. Clair, a complete concrete highway will extend from Port Huron to Detroit along the St. Clair river.

Ann Arbor—More than 30 students of the University of Michigan will spend the summer making a survey of the industrial situation of Detroit through actual contacts with the workers and employers. Those selected for the survey will be given positions in Detroit factories where they will have opportunities to gather first hand information. The survey group of the university is one of the several from other colleges throughout the United States who will study the Detroit situation this summer.

Grand Rapids—Ollie A. Harmon, 27 years old, night clerk at the Y. W. C. A. Building, who was one of two men arrested by detectives as "lovers lane" swindlers who intimidated members of spooning parties with threats of arrest and extorted money was fined $50 and costs by Justice John C. Loucks here. Harmon testified against Joseph Jansma, 54 years old, an insurance agent, who is charged with representing himself as an officer and who it is alleged was Harmon's companion on their night ventures.

The Analyst

Count Leo Tolstoi, the Russian sculptor, said at a New York reception:

"Psycho-analysis is the ugliest and silliest fad of modern times. A lot of novelists have taken it up, but how my father would have hated it!

"Psycho-analysis analyzes the finest things and proves everything to be ugly. It's like the professor whose wife burst into tears when he refused her a summer holiday in Europe.

"'Ah, my friend,' he said to her, 'tears are useless. I have analyzed them. They contain a little phosphate of lime, some chloride of sodium, oxygen, hydrogen, and that's all.'"

Africans Fond of Music

There is no escape from music in Africa. Every native has some sort of musical instrument, bought perhaps from slender wages, but more likely fashioned out of any material close at hand—from 100-gallon oil containers to sun-dried calabashes. And whether the music is made by black man or white man, jazz is just the same in Africa as elsewhere—music which has come winging down the years from its obscure origin in the jungles of the Dark continent.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

Elizabeth Chandler to Jane Howell

Hazelbank, 12th, Mo. 23rd 1830.

I write at last, my dear Aunt, once more from "beneath our own roof and by our own fireside," in the midst of one of the wide openings of "out of the world" Michigan. There is, indeed, as thee observes, something startling in the thought, and it seems at times almost impossible to realize the truth of our living so far separated We did not leave Comstock's until the second of this month, being delayed considerably longer than we expected at the commencement of the building, and for the past two or three weeks, principally on account of the well which had to be sunk much deeper than we expected; it is about thirty eight feet in depth and the water is excellent

We received, last week, the packet thee sent by John Lovett; what pleasure I need not tell thee, for I dare say thee can fancy how triumphantly I sat in the midst of my treasures, scanning hand writing, breaking seals and peeping first into one thing to read a line and then into another, as if I feared they might elude my grasp unless secured by the spell of my eye sight.

John had a pretty rough passage in his journey, which occupied six to seven weeks, being obliged to encamp out one night in the midst of a swamp, and as might be expected in so long a journey performed at this season of the year, to submit to other not very agreeable encounters. But he arrived with his family in good health and spirits, and has got settled in part of a house about three miles from us and very near his own place.

We continue to like the country and are particularly satisfied with our choice of situation, though thee will probably be surprised to learn that brother has already had occasion for the assistance of a lawyer in some of his business, he was however, not exorbitant in his charges and settled the affair, I believe quite to Tom's satisfaction.

Our house is pronounced by the neighbors to be "slick one." It is situated on rising ground about the center of the lot, which spreads out in the plain towards the road and friend Comstock's and commands a fine view of his and Johnson's farms. All else around it is the uncultivated opening, sloping down to the barn and swelling up behind in a beautiful variety of graceful, wild undulations while the hills seem to unfold themselves as if to open a path to join other habitations immediately behind them. This, however, is not the case. With one exception, we are the last family in the town and they are about a mile behind us.

Our house is in dimensions about twenty by twenty six feet; about eight and a half feet high in the lower apartments, and four logs above the floor in the upper. It is one story and a half in height, with a door and two windows in front, and two more disposed in the other situation down stairs, and one in each gable up stairs, It is divided below into three rooms, which suffice for our present accommodations, and may be conveniently partitioned above and will make two good chambers.

I often wish thee could take a look at us, and I can just fancy the mingled expression of curiosity and mirth with which thee would eye our home made furniture and apartments, but I can assure thee our house is by no means despicable. It was pronounced by the lawyer who did the outside plastering or pointing between the logs (what strange uses things are put to sometimes), to be the snuggest log house in Michigan. The logs both inside and out, have been squared off by an expert axeman, which adds much to the neatness of its appearance. The doors are of walnut, which is in very common use here, and the partition boards as well and the chamber floors are planed and fitted together by grooving, a thing unknown in any other log house about. The windows are neatly framed and glazed, which latter operation was performed by aunt Ruth and myself, and in the spring we intend having the walls within doors also pointed (not covered with a full dress of plastering) that having been deferred till then on account of our not wishing to run any risk of taking cold from the dampness of the mortar.

On entering that apartment which may be best described by the comprehensive appellation of "the room" as it is conjointly parlor, kitchen and hall, the first conspicuous object is a large flour bin situated by way of sideboard at the parlor end, over which from a wooden pin depends the looking glass. On either end of it stand aunt Ruth's walnut box and my cabinet against the wall lengthwise of the room, on one side of the window stands the dough trough on the other a long box covered with a walnut board and answering the purpose of a shelf or table; between them and behind the stove, it placed an oaken bench, which with another of somewhat better make, and aunt Ruth's rocking chair comprise our whole wealth of seats. A whisk broom—brushes are not in vogue. Some kitchen utensils, and the red chest placed on one of its ends against the partition, and covered with green cloth, to support my desk, with Benjamin Rush and thy landscape hanging over it, about complete the catalogue of our furniture in the room.

Careful Crossing Campaign Begins June 1

A special drive to reduce the frequency of accidents at railroad crossings begins Tuesday, June 1, under the auspices of the Safety Section of the American Railway Association. to continue until October 1. During these four months every device that ingenuity can devise will be employed by railroad safety organizations to persuade automobilists and others to save their own lives by making sure the way is safe before venturing upon a crossing.

One means will be the display of many thousands of posters warning people to be careful at crossings. The New York Central Lines alone, will use 60,000 of these posters.

Motion pictures will also be freely used. One, called "Gambling With Death", produced by the New York Central, is being exhibited daily throughout the country, six prints being circulated in theaters in New York Central territory, while a seventh is being used by an automobile association and still others by the railroad in its traveling motion picture theater and otherwise wherever an audience can be gathered.

Division officials are making special trips to inspect crossings. Wherever conditions can be improved it will be done. Public safety meetings will be held, blotters bearing on the back a warning to beware at crossings will be distributed in quantities, so the business man can always have a silent admonition to be carefel before his eyes, and the active co-operation of public officials and organizations of every sort will be solicited.

Once more instructions to locomotive engineers to be sure to sound the whistle when approaching crossings will be renewed, But little benefit can be anticipated from this repetition of orders, because it is already strictly obeyed and more especially because the warning whistle is increasingly disregarded.

The strangest phenomemon in connection with the appalling increase in grade crossing accidents is that instead of trains striking automobiles, more and more autos are running into trains.

"Fourteen percent of all the persons killed in crossing accidents on the New York Central Lines in 1924," said Chas. E. Hill, General Safety Agent, "lost their lives by driving into the sides of trains. In 1925 this proportion had increased to 22½ percent, no fewer than 70 being killed and 350 injured in this way. Nearly one-fourth of those killed and injured at crossings ran into trains. It seems incredible, but the figures cannot be disputed.

"Let me give you some examples of what the railroads have to contend with, all happening on the New York Central Lines, which have less than 5 percent of the total mileage in the United States, in a period of six days.

"An intoxicated woman drove through a gate at a crossing in Indiana, breaking the gate and then ran into a telephone pole, smashing her car.

"Two days later an intoxicated man, disregarding a watchman's warning, drove on to a crossing, also in Indiana, then turned off on to the track, tipping his car over. He ran off and escaped, but his companion, being too drunk to run was arrested. On the same day in the same town a woman, also drunk, drove into the side of a car being moved by a switch engine.

"On the following day a drunken driver ran over a child near this same town. In trying to escape he drove his car into the forty-sixth car back from the locomotive at a crossing. His companion, also intoxicated, was killed; the driver was arrested.

"A party of six persons returning from a funeral in Ontario, drove into the side of a freight train and five of the six were killed. The driver was a farmer in the neighborhood, well acquainted with the locality, the crossing was considered one of the best on the line, and it was broad day. Two days later a man drove his car against the engine of a passenger train in Illinois and was killed—seven killed in six days by running into trains of a single railroad system.

"These examples are characteristic of what railroads everywhere have to contend with. They show the need of public co-operation, if grade crossing accidents are to be reduced."

Farm Bureau Drive

Plans for the Volunteer Campaign for Farm Bureau members in Hillsdale County have been progressing nicely. The series of meetings that have been held in different parts of the county closed last week. The average attendance has been fair and many people became better acquainted with the Farm Bureau as an organization and the necessity of farmers organizing and staying organized. A number of the townships have their team workers lined up for the drive to be put on the first week in June, while others will be completed this week.

To-day, (Friday. May 28) there will be an all-day meeting at Pinkham & Wright's hall for all Campaign team workers in the county and their wives. The meeting is to further acquaint the team workers with the development and workings of the Farm Bureau, and it is very important that each team worker be present. Lucius E. Wilson will be the main speaker and those who heard him at the first banquet April 3rd, know that he will bring a message worth hearing. However, there will be other farm bureau speakers and a very interesting time has been planned. There will be a free luncheon at noon, so the wives can come and feel they are not responsible for the noon meal. Meeting will be called at 9:30 a. m. sharp.

Child's Health Maintained By WholesomeDiet

Modern educators are leaning more each year to the old Greek idea of rearing the citizens of the future. They are working on the principle of "a sound mind in a sound body."

Good health is built primarily on the foundation of right food. The sort of food the child has determines to a large extent the fitness of the man or woman.

Children have to be taught to like the foods that are good for them much in the same way that they have to be taught arithmetic and history. Boys and girls are not born with any particular desire for cereals or for bread. It's up to their parents to see that they learn the rudiments of a balanced diet and the reason for such a diet. Firmness and patience are often necessary in the teaching, but the job must be done.

Many mothers unconsciously put their children under health handicaps by allowing them to use their own discretion in the matter of eating candy, fruit, nuts and cookies. By so doing they set a precedent in the matter of other foods and make the teaching of good nutrition harder.

One or two articles are not enough to supply a child's needs for a meal. In order that there be normal development, there must be variety.

Fresh eggs, whole cereals, fruits in season and leafy vegetables should occupy an important part in the growing child's dietary. Then, too, a certain amount of concentrated food is necessary for children, because rapid growth whets their appetites to a razor edge, so that they crave more food than their systems can well dispose of. Evaporated milk, diluted with orange juice as a drink, or in custards or other baked foods, is especially beneficial for the growing child for the reason that it is concentrated to double the richness of ordinary cow's milk and is entirely sterile as well. The can of evaporated milk solves the problem of obtaining perfectly pure milk, as well as the problem of lack of refrigeration facilities, since this type of milk will keep indefinitely in the can.

Eat Less and Live Longer, Says Lawyer

By W. W. O'BRIEN

(Noted Criminal Lawyer of Chicago.)

W. W. O'Brien.

Business and professional men working under high nervous pressure do not live as long as men whose pursuits keep them out of doors and active. Examine the records of longevity and you will find that on the average the longest-lived men are soldiers, sailors and farmers, all avocations which tend to keep a man at his physical best.

Man, in general, rolls down the hill of life fastest when his figure is rotund. "Leanness and longevity" is a good axiom for business men to remember. If office workers would eat a little less, they would add years to their lives.

Overfeeding is as dangerous to adults as underfeeding is to children. Foods difficult to digest, or which overstimulate, should be avoided by persons whose work does not require any particular amount of physical exercise. Yet thousands of business men eat as much as or more than men who do manual labor. And, inevitably, nature rebels and sickness results.

Many of the country's foremost executives eat but two meals a day, breakfast and dinner in the evening. They seek to keep the o[illegible]ns of the body from becoming [illegible] Thousands of other business[illegible]onfine themselves at noontime to[illegible]ards, puddings, soups and other [illegible]ing dishes made with milk, or ev[illegible] milk, which is milk in its mo[illegible] form, from which 60 per cen[illegible] water has been removed by [illegible]tion. Such a diet is light and [illegible] assimilated.

There is no more necessary [illegible] to be learned by the brain [illegible] than how to keep well and he[illegible] by proper attention to food habits.

Eating Greater Cause of Death Than Drinking

Drink is the second greatest cause of disease and death. Food comes first, then drink. Excluding alcoholic beverages, there are dozens of drinks on the market today whose effect is detrimental, particularly to children.

Milk is the best drink for children. Not only is it drink, but food as well—the most nearly perfect food known to man.

Milk is an all-the-year-round drink and for this reason the children often rebel against drinking it. This condition, however, may be overcome by the introduction of the mixed drink. Milk or diluted evaporated milk may be mixed with eggs or used in fruit juices or in some other way which will disguise the fact that the drink contains milk. In the hot summer months when the child naturally drinks more than in cooler weather, it is wise to vary the ways of serving milk, so as not to create a distaste for this important food.

Iced Cocoa

3 tbsp. cocoa
2 tbsp. sugar
½ cup hot water
Few grains salt
1½ cups evaporated milk diluted with
1½ cups water
¾ tsp. vanilla

Scald the diluted milk in a double boiler. Mix cocoa, sugar, salt and add the hot water. Cook over a low flame from 10 to 15 minutes, stirring occasionally to prevent burning. Add to the cocoa the scalded milk; return to the double boiler and continue cooking for 10 minutes. Add vanilla, chill before serving. Pour into tall glasses which contain a few small cubes of ice. Serve plain or top with whipped cream sprinkled with cinnamon. Serves four.

Egg-Nog

1 egg
Few grains salt
1 tbsp. sugar
Few gratings nutmeg
2-3 cup cold evaporated milk diluted with
2-3 cup ice water
2 tbsp. berry or cherry juice or
2 tbsp. non-alcoholic sherry

Separate white from yolk of egg. Add salt to white and beat until stiff. Beat yolk until thick and lemon colored and add the fruit juices, nutmeg and sugar. Combine diluted milk with yolk mixture. Pour into a tall glass and put the egg white on top. Sprinkle top with chopped nuts and serve at once. Serves one.

Orange-Nog

½ cup orange juice
Few grains salt
2 1-3 tsp. sugar
1-3 cup evaporated milk diluted with
1-3 cup cold water

Add sugar and salt to orange juice and pour slowly into the diluted milk, stirring to mix thoroughly. Chill before serving. One-half tsp. lemon improves this drink for many. Serves one.

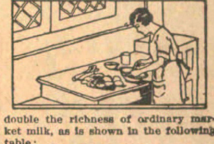
Young At 60, Or Old At 40? Diet Decides

Women are as old or as young as their state of health. A woman may be young at sixty years or old at forty. It all depends on her physical well-being.

Youth and beauty have a foundation in sound health. And food is easily the most important item in health. In giving consideration to the subjects of diet and beauty, women should not forget the food essentials that make for the preservation of teeth, hair, figure and complexion.

Blame for round shoulders, flat chest and poor teeth among women is due in large measure to faulty diet, or, specifically, to a lack of lime and phosphorus. Milk, or evaporated milk, which is simply cow's milk with 60 per cent of the water taken away, is especially rich in lime.

Because of the concentration of evaporated milk, which is regulated by government standards, it is of double the richness of ordinary market milk, as is shown in the following table:



Ordinary Milk.
Fat	3.5	to 4	per cent
Sugar (lactose)	4.5	to 4.75	per cent
Proteins	3.5	to 4	per cent
Minerals	.7	to .75	per cent
Evaporated Milk.
Fat	7.8	to 8.2	per cent
Sugar (lactose)	9.5	to 10	per cent
Proteins	7.5	to 8.2	per cent
Minerals	1.4	to 1.6	per cent

A quart of milk a day for adults is recommended by doctors not only because of its high mineral content, but for the reasons that it helps keep the digestive tract in proper condition, strengthens the bo[illegible] resist d[illegible] and g[illegible]

Motion Pictures, Lawlessness and Drunkenness

Anything which tends to increase disrespect for law and authority needs to be given serious consideration, for the American nation is facing conditions of lawlessness which are alarming to all thinking men and women. This is not a case of the violation of one law or of a particular group of laws, but of every law from the laws against murder down to the traffic laws, which some people seem to think were made to violate. One is often amazed at the ease with which some very respectable people wink at violation of law. True liberty is founded on law and order, and when the nation fails to recognize this truth, it is not only in serious danger of losing its liberty, but is trembling on the brink of social disintegration. Therefore, in discussing the violation of any law, we are discussing the question of lawlessness in general.

In discussing the relation of motion pictures of lawlessness, our first and most serious consideration is perhaps the question of commercialization of the Sabbath day. The motion picture publications are full of thrusts at our Sabbath laws. Every time a city makes an effort to enforce its Sabbath laws, in spite of the efforts of the Motion Picture Industry to overthrow them, the newspapers are flooded with most absurd anti-blue law propaganda. Every conceivable effort is put forth to make the friends of Sabbath observance appear ridiculous and to bring the entire movement into ill-repute. We are told that the people demand Sunday movies; that many can attend the motion picture theatre on no other day; that the law is really obsolete. Many other equally untrue arguments are advanced. As a matter of fact, the motion picture industry is not only responsible for an immense amount of this propaganda, but it has been using its influence for years against political candidates not favoring Sunday motion picture local option law. Even when a municipality or state votes decisively, sustaining its Sunday laws, the motion picture people are unwilling to accept the verdict of the majority. In South Dakota, where the people sustained their Sabbath law by a popular vote in 1922, the motion picture men, I am informed, refuse to sell some of their best pictures to the exhibitors unless the exhibitors will show these pictures on Sunday. Thus they are trying to force the Sunday movie upon the people and to defeat the will of the majority. Wisconsin has had an even more serious situation, according to reports, for there pictures are furnished free to the exhibitor who will violate the law, and if he is prosecuted, an attorney will be employed for him and his fine will be paid by the industry. One of the most common plans, where sentiment is strongly against Sunday movies, is to run the theatre without paid admission, to give the offering received to public charities or other public enterprises until the people become accustomed to Sunday movies. Then, the theatre can operate without restraint. This sort of desecration is particularly marked in it influence on child life. Many laws are violated without making the children partners in their violations, but the movie draws the children and makes them violators of this law of God and man.

PROHIBITION

We turn from this question to that of our Prohibition laws and it is very doubtful whether or not the Christian people of our land realize how much the motion pictures are doing to keep alive the memory of the old saloon days and that always in a favorable light, or how much they are doing to make the violation of the 18th Amendment seem inviting. Few pictures are to be found which do not sometime in the course of the picture, show drinking. Recently I went to see Harold Lloyd in "Hot Water." With one exception it is a wholesome comedy. In fact, Harold Lloyd pictures are commonly considered among the cleanest pictures that are produced. I therefore was decidedly surprised when a man in the picture pulled a wine flask from his pocket and persuaded the hero—Harold Lloyd to take a good drink, so that he would have courage to talk up to his mother-in-law, who has been portrayed as such an unreasonable and provoking character that one feels she could scarcely get worse than she deserves. After some hesitation he drains the bottle. Meantime his wife and her brother are shown looking at a picture of this impossible mother-in-law featured in the daily newspaper as president of the Woman's Club who has delivered an address on "The Evil Influences of Drink." Thus into a picture clean and fit for young people is introduced a scene caricaturing the women who for over half a century worked for the Prohibition Amendment, and presenting the violation of that amendment in a favorable light. There are many pictures that thoughtful parents would not allow their children to attend, but Harold Lloyd's pictures are among those we accept without question. Therefore, they should be kept free from scenes encouraging lawlessness, from ridicule of the reformer or from any attack on American ideals.

"Pastureless Cows" On Dry Rations

That dairymen cannot rely on pasture alone for milk and make money by so doing, is the opinion of certain experts according to experiments carried on by a research farm near Redford, this state

"The record of cow No. 76 in 1924 and 1925 is typical of the results obtained in these experiments This cow is an ordinary grade Holstein and rated a good producer. Throughout the milking period she produced an average of 3.6 gallons of milk per day, at the end of 1924 after being fed on hay and grain ration with absolutely no pasture. At the end of the lactation period she experienced a normal decline in milk production. She was in splendid condition as the result of her year-round grain ration, as she evidenced by starting off her 1925 lactation period by producing up to 5.4 gallons of milk per day.

A year ago this week the cow went on pasture. For ten days the production moved up, but after the first stimulus of the grass tonic wore off, she fell steadily in milk as her grain ration was reduced. Two months after she went on pasture, she was receiving two pounds of grain per day, Her production had dropped from 4.6 gallons per day to 2.6 gallons. The production dropped until the 280th day when she was producing 1.1 gallons daily as against 3 gallons daily in the previous lactation at the same time. No dairyman could ask for more convincing proof that the reliance on grass alone is costly and that a popular grain ration with pasture throughout the summer pays real dividends in milk production."

Hillsdale County O. E. S. Association met at Cambria Thursday May 20th, with 250 representatives present from different parts of the county. A business session was held with election of officers as follows: President, Rozella Townsend; vice pres., H. Feighner of Litchfield; second vice, Bessie Turner, Osseo; secretary and treasurer, Nellie Smith of Waldron; marshal, Louise Seitz of Hillsdale; chaplain, Allie Hotkins of North Adams. Emily Derr who has served as county secretary for twelve years, resigned. The noon recess followed the election of officers and dinner was served in the Masonic and I. O. O. F. dining hall. The afternoon session opened at 1:30 with a piano solo by Clark Pearce of North Adams.

Verily—things do move in this twentieth century. A trading firm in San Francisco (the McCormicks) have bought a whole fleet of freight steamers and established a trade with the east coast of South America, shipping machinery, canned goods and all kinds of manufactured articles for which the South American republics constantly clamor. The trip is made in exactly 30 days between San Francisco and Buenos Aires, Argentine by way of the west coast to Cape Horn and the Straits of Magellan, while the return is up the east coast, visiting Brazilian coffee ports and taking on coffee, rubber, dye woods, copra, nuts, thence home by the Panama Canal.

Out-Door Life Exposition

Gogebic in the Upper Peninsula Grand Beach and the Upper Peninsula Development Co. all had alluring exhibits to tell the story of out-door recreation in Michigan in summer. Some of the most beautiful boats in the Exposition came from Detroit, Albion and other Michigan cities. Some of the most popular auto camping outfits were furnished by Michigan firms. The fourth Annual National Out-door Life Exposition was the most attractive from a show standpoint that has yet been given. A dozen porcupines in a large pine tree overlooking the small lagoons was the first bit of out-door wild life that met the visitors at the entrance All the booths were decorated with evergreen and birch bark. In addition to the many skins, heads and stuffed animals, there were half-grown bears, tiny bear cubs, deer, baby coyotes, woodchucks, squirrels, and the porcupine family in the pine tree was augmented by the arrival of two baby porcupines during the show. Among the new attractions at the Show were the Log Rolling and Wood Chopping and Casting contests.

A style show of correct Out-door Clothes was put on in the afternoon by VonLengerke & Antoine. with girls from the "Castles in The Air Company" as models, on a balcony specially built around the gallery of the North Annex. The young women showed costumes for hunting, fishing, bathing, hiking, camping, golf, tennis, and riding. both in the park and mountain trails.

The Fifth Annual National Out-door Life Exposition which promises to be the largest and most picturesque of them all, will be held at the Coliseum in Chicago May 9 to 15, 1927.

Kerosene serves well to clean the sewing machine bearings when they are clogged and dirty. It is used by putting it into the oil holes and running the machine for a few moments. Then, since kerosene is really a cleanser, but not a lubricant, great care must be used to get it all out by flushing with machine oil.

CHAPTER XX

One bitter day in the middle of January six lean dogs, heads down, limped painfully across the clearing at Wailing River. At the tail of the sled followed two men, whose haggard eyes and frost-cracked faces bore the scars of the barrage of the January blizzards.

"We have worried much, Michel and I," said the factor, as Steele and David thawed out before the trade-house stove. "You struck terrible weather. Did your rations hold out?"

"Yes, by cutting them in two," replied Steele with a grimace.

"We'll give you your fill as soon as it can be cooked. And your mission—it was successful?" hazarded the curious St. Onge, ignorant of the purpose of the six-hundred-mile midwinter journey.

"It was," and Steele handed the factor the oil-skin envelope. "Read that!"

St. Onge read the release in open-mouthed amazement.

"Man, man! How did you get it?" he gasped.

Unchecked tears slowly gathered in the eyes of the overjoyed old man. "My boy," he said brokenly. "It would be the proudest day of my life. You still care for her, don't you?" he demanded anxiously.

"You know I care for her," Steele gently answered, "but I went to Albany for her—not for myself. You must promise me that she hears nothing of this until I have left. She would think she had to pay—feel honor bound. I know her, monsieur. You must not tell her."

"But if she cares? I feel, in her heart, that she does," protested St. Onge.

"She must be a free agent," insisted Steele. "I go south as soon as the dogs are rested. I shall talk to her first."

"I'm sorry, but as you wish it, I shall not tell her."

That night, after what, to the hungry Steele, was a sumptuous meal, consisting largely of caribou, St. Onge left his guest and daughter alone.

During the meal the girl had furtively noted the frostbitten fingers of the American, the drawn cheeks, blackened and cracked by the wind of the Albany trail, the strained look in the gray eyes. Steele had warmed to the sincerity of her welcome, the evident pleasure in her greeting. Exhausted as he was, the days before his departure were too few to waste one evening by seeking rest, so he watched her with hungry eyes as they talked, wondering whether her heart had changed. But she gave no sign, and he was too proud to ask.

On the evening before he left with David for Nepigon, he again sat alone with the woman for whose welfare he had given the best that was in him—for whom he had toiled and planned, faced the sting of the norther and the pinch of the searing cold; the woman he loved too deeply to make himself the recipient of her gratitude.

"You have never told me, monsieur, why you took that terrible journey to Albany," she said, after a silence in which her black brows were drawn together in evident abstraction.

The man's eyes softened as they lingered on the clean lines of her profile, the masses of her dusky hair, for she had asked the question with averted face as if fearing his answer.

"I went to Albany," he said, "to test my judgment of human nature."

"And you found—?"

"I found—that I was a mind reader," he answered with a smile.

"Is it a very great secret?" she asked with a wistful look in the dark eyes that searched his.

"No, you will hear—tomorrow."

"But, tomorrow—you go?"

"Yes."

"And I am not to know until you have gone? So that is it?"

"You will understand—tomorrow," he put her off with.

For a long interval she sat gazing at the rug at her feet, then leaned toward him, her face tense with feeling. "What must you think of me?" she demanded. "You have planned and worked for us, my father and me—given—given—given! And we—we have sat with folded hands while you toiled—and won. Oh, I want you to know how fine you have been through it all—want you to sense my gratitude—before you go."

She had risen and was pacing the floor—restraint gone.

"I have been selfish—inhospitable," she stumbled on, her eyes avoiding his, "but I want you to know that there is nothing—nothing which I will not do—to prove my gratitude for what you have done!" She turned from him and he knew by the convulsive movement of her shoulders that she was weeping.

"There are some things without price," he said gently. "What I have done, I have not done—for reward. I know—that I have your gratitude—it is enough."

She turned swiftly upon him with: "But if you knew—"; seemingly confused, checked by a surge of emotion she could not control, she stood for an instant, inarticulate; then left him alone.

Late in February, long after the last of the fur cached at the Stooping had been traded with St. Onge, a dog-team driven by a strange Indian arrived at Wailing River. To the surprised questions of the factor the driver answered that he had come from Nepigon station with a package and a letter addressed to Mademoiselle Denise St. Onge. The factor took the long, wooden box and the letter to his quarters, where he found his daughter with Charlotte in the kitchen.

"A packet has arrived from Nepigon," announced the excited St. Onge, "with a box and a letter for you, my child."

"A letter for me?" she said, a wave of color sweeping her face, while St. Onge watched her curiously.

In the living room Denise St. Onge opened the letter, postmarked Kenora, and read:

"Mademoiselle St. Onge:
"Wailing River.

"What I wrote you at Ogoke last autumn was a lie. I am sorry.

"Rose Bernard, formerly Laflamme."

The paper slowly slipped from the fingers of the numbed girl and fluttered to the floor.

"What is it? Who is it from?" demanded her father.

The face of Denise St. Onge was the color of chalk as she raised her hopeless eyes. "He went to Albany for me," she said, as if to herself, "and would not tell me I was free, fearing my gratitude. And now—I receive this."

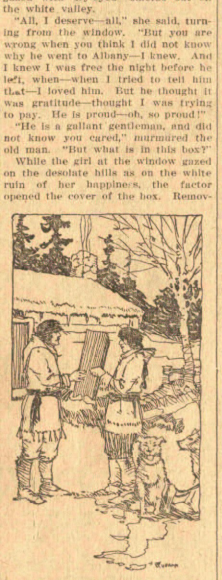
"But what is it?"

"Read for yourself, father," and the stunned girl walked to a window, and gazed with dry-eyed emorse out on the white valley.

"All, I deserve—all," she said, turning from the window. "But you are wrong when you think I did not know why he went to Albany—I knew. And I knew I was free the night before he left, when—when I tried to tell him that—I loved him. But he thought it was gratitude—thought I was trying to pay. He is proud—oh, so proud!"

"He is a gallant gentleman, and did not know you cared," murmured the old man. "But what is in this box?"

While the girl at the window gazed on the desolate hills as on the white ruin of her happiness, the factor opened the cover of the box. Removing the heavy wrappings of paper protecting the contents, he gasped in surprise.



He Had Come From Nepigon Station With a Package and a Letter Addressed to Mademoiselle Denise St. Onge.

"Mon Dieu, mon Dieu!"

The girl turned from her bitter retrospection. "What is it?"

"Come here!"

She joined him and bent over the box. In its wrappings lay the ebony case of a violin. On the lid of the case letters of gold spelled: "Nicolo Amati, Cremona."

"An Amati!" she cried in her joy. "A priceless Amati!" Then, brokenly, "Father, father! I am paying—I am paying!"

With feverish haste the key was found and the case opened. She tenderly lifted the rare handiwork of the world-famous maker from its bed of velvet and impulsively caressed it with her cheek.

"And he sends no word—no letter?" cried the perplexed St. Onge.

She smiled at his naivete. "There is no word to send, father. He is sorry there, in his gay New York, for the lonely woman he once knew in the wilderness. This," and she held aloft the violin, "is his anodyne for the desolate—the symbol of his pity."

* * * * * * *

It was May, and Brent Steele had been hard at work at the museum for three months. In March he had received two letters brought from Wailing River by the messenger sent with the violin. The letter from the factor was strained and self-conscious. Together with brief mention of the arrival of the fur from the Stooping, St. Onge had profusely thanked his friend for the costly gift which had made the long evenings again bright with music. But of Denise he said little, except that she was well and played incessantly. So much had happened that the winter seemed unusually long—was, in fact, a bit on their nerves, and the spring would be most welcome. Some day, St. Onge suggested, it might be possible for Steele to revisit the valley of the Wailing. He knew the way and his friends there would live for that day.

The other letter was shorter. It ran:

"Dear Monsieur Steele:

"A violin—and a Nicolo Amati! Your generosity and your thought of me make these words but feeble things. You, to whom gratitude is distasteful, must yet endure my heartfelt thanks, not only for the rare gift, but for the journey you made for my peace of mind through that terrible wind and cold. The violin will ever be a living memory of one who came, a stranger, to two lonely and hopeless creatures, and left them, facing the future with courage.

"Denise St. Onge."

If only the letter had given him a sign that she wanted him—needed him, instead of dwelling on her gratitude. She was so proud and so brave. If only he had taken her in his arms that last night, and learned from her eyes, the blood in her face, the beat of her heart, whether she was paying a debt of honor or—loved him.

Then, late in May, came a letter—addressed by a hand unused to the pen, and postmarked at Nepigon station on the Canadian Pacific. David doubtless had news and some one had written for him. Steele opened the envelope and read with increasing wonder and delight:

"Miseu Steele—

"Iv you weesh mamsel you burn up de trail to Walling Reever queek. All de long snow she have play an play de sad museec an cry on her bed. Wen we go on hill first tam she lift her arm to de sout an say, Cum bak to me. Dat mean you. You cum lak de win. Michel tak dis to de railroad, he an me get marry wen meesnary cum in june. Charlotte."

It was from the faithful Ojibway woman who had for so long faithfully served Denise.

That night the Montreal sleeper out of New York carried a man whose gray eyes were strangely happy. A week later two friends were poling the nose of a canoe into the spring freshet of the Jackfish as if pursued by a Windigo. Farther on they recklessly ran in succession each white-water of the swollen Rouge. Down Ogoke, the measured churn-swish, churn-swish of lunging blades marked off the miles to the outlet. Then riding the flood water of the racing Wailing, one afternoon the canoe slid into the beach of the post.

In the trade-house Steele and David found St. Onge and his head-man. There were surprised greetings, then: "I have come for her," announced the American. "Where is she?"

"She has gone to the ridge," answered St. Onge with shining eyes. "You will find her with her violin—alone."

At the edge of the scrub, below the bare brow of the hill, Steele stopped, with a heart which jarred him with its beat. He wanted to watch her—listen to her playing—before making his coming known. With a shaking hand he parted the spruce and looked.

Silhouetted against the soft May sky, she stood with her violin, facing from him. Presently she tilted her head and drew the bow across the strings. Faintly drifted down to him the haunting minors of the "Elegie" he first heard at the rapids—the symbol of her fears and despair.

Then, of a sudden, the far call of errant Canadas broke in on the strains of the violin. The girl stopped short off and searched the sky for the wedge of geese. Out of the south she saw them coming and opened her arms. Then, as the violin changed its mood—broke into her own, "When Spring Comes North," he noiselessly approached her.

She finished, and as the last of the flock passed overhead, waved her bow. "Goodby! goodby!" she called, as the wanderers faded into the north.

"I have followed them back to you," spoke a low voice behind her.

The girl turned startled eyes on the man who stood smiling. Over her throat and face up to the dusky hair mounted the blood.

"You!" she faltered. "It's not a dream?"

"I have come back," he said, "for your gratitude."

"My gratitude?" She smiled through mist-veiled eyes, as he stood beside her. "You ask no more?" And she was in his arms, his face buried in the raven hair.

"Denise! Denise!"

She raised her flaming face to his, and there on the hilltop they stood, oblivious of the world.

"Do you think this gratitude?" she murmured at length.

"No—paradise!"

"At last—my spring—has come north," she sighed, "after the long snows."

No Mail for Him

The postal service is laughing at the story of a post-office inspector who went into the hills of Arkansas to check up a village post office. The neighbors said the P. M. had gone fishing. Finding him, the inspector asked, "Are you the postmaster?" After a minute the P. M. said, "Yep. What's your name?" "P. D. Smith." The P. M. reached into his back pocket, took out a bunch of letters and running over them for the addresses, said, "Nope. Nothing fer ye," and went on fishing.—Capper's Weekly.

Many and Various Are "Graveyards" of Books

When a book languishes, unread, unlooked at and unasked for on the shelves of a library, one phase of its life has passed and it is destined soon to enter on a new one. But what is the next stage in its career? That, to the man in the street, is one of the mysteries of literature.

Most libraries have a sort of sanctuary for unwanted books—a chamber of the forgotten—where they are kept for a time and then disposed of. Sometimes they find their way to second-hand book barrows; sometimes they are repulped to supply paper for other books with all the world before them.

Luckiest of all are those which the London library decides to discard. It was recently revealed that they are sent out to the Seychelles islands, where one book is as good as another, and the date of a volume's publication has no influence on its chances of popularity.

Adventurous books, these, that go voyaging out to the Indian ocean. But there is a price to pay for adventure. Sooner or later the ants will get them, and when these voracious devourers of literature are done with them there will be nothing left for ordinary readers!—London Mail.

FEEDING TURKEY POULTS PROPERLY

It is very poor economy to stint turkeys, especially young growing stock; for when once stunted, it takes a long while to recover. For the first 24 hours after the chicks emerge from the shell they should remain under the hen unmolested, both to dry and gain strength and hardiness. They do not require any food, as the store nature provides will last over this time. As the chicks hatch sometimes irregularity, the older ones can be cared for in the house until the others are ready to be taken away, when the hen and her brood can be removed to a roomy coop, with a tight-board bottom and rain-proof roof. They should be fed five times daily, but just what they will clean up. The first food should consist of stale bread moistened in water or in fresh milk—the milk is preferred. Do not wet the food, a very moist or sloppy food will cause sickness and a high rate of mortality among young turkeys. If milk can be spared, give it to them freely in place of water.

The too lavish use of corn meal has caused more deaths among young chicks than has cholera among grown fowls. Until the chicks are half-grown, corn meal should be but sparingly fed; but after that time, when judiciously used, is one of the very best and cheapest foods for fowls and chicks. Nine-tenths of the young turkeys which die when in the "downy" state get their death-blow from corn meal, as it is a very common practice to merely moisten with cold water some raw corn meal and then feed it in that way.

Young chicks relish occasional feeds of cracked wheat and wheat screenings; while rice, well boiled, is not only greedily eaten by the chicks, but is one of the very best things that can be given. It frequently happens that damaged lots of rice, or low grades of it, can be bought at low figures in the cities. As it increases in bulk in cooking, it is not an expensive food for young chicks even at the regular retail price, though it would not ordinarily pay to feed it to full-grown fowls very liberally or very frequently. In the absence of worms, bugs, etc., during the early spring, cheap parts of fresh beef can be well boiled and shredded up for the little chicks; but care must be taken not to feed more frequently than once in two days, and only then in moderation. Feeding meat is very beneficial to young turkeys when they are "shooting" their first quill feathers, as then they require extra nourishment to repair the drain on immature and weakly bodies.

Youth and Age Will Not Mingle Well in Flock

Conditions fatal to profits are developed in the poultry flock by allowing youth and age to mingle indiscriminately in the runs and houses, according to Prof. L. F. Payne, head of the poultry department at the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"If the pullets are fed enough for growing purposes," he explained, "the hens become fat and sluggish and if the hens are fed just sufficient to lay well the pullets starve."

In the farm demonstration flock at the college poultry farm the 75 best pullets are separated from the 50 best hens October 1 each year and are kept in separate compartments throughout the winter.

Poultry Facts

Green feed is very essential in stimulating egg production.

* * *

* * *

* * *

Too mature pullets can be held back by withdrawing all mash and feeding only grains, and this sparingly.

* * *

Arrange the poultry breeding pens. A few more dollars spent for a high-grade rooster will be a good investment.

* * *

* * *

Feed a dry mash and green feed so the hens will always have something to peck at without troubling the eggs.

* * *

Please remember the importance of fresh air. Poultry houses that are not ventilated are responsible for many poultry ailments.

* * *

Under good conditions and management it is estimated that at least five to six eggs must be set for every pullet ready for service in the fall.

* * *

A single pair of chicken lice will multiply to 125,000 in eight weeks, under favorable conditions. That's enough to bite up your whole flock.

* * *

Actions often speak louder than examinations. The heavy layer is a busy hen. She rises early and works late.

* * *

Trap nesting the laying hens in your poultry flock will help to eliminate the nonproductive birds, furnish definite knowledge concerning traits and habits of individual birds, help to tame each hen and add mechanical precision to judgment and experience in developing and maintaining the production of the flock

Evidently the Doc knows whereof he speaks, and what he speaks is similar to what Prof. Voight of the great northwestern U believes for Voight says there is bound to be a change in many institutions of higher learning during the next few years.

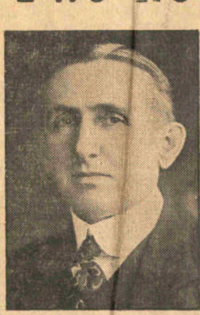
Two NOTABLES



Honorable Arthur WILLIAMS.

Representative 3rd District
(Deceased)

Probably one of the best men politically Michigan ever produced. Keen, conservative, well educated, he would have done a world of good at Washington if the Supreme Ruler had not cut him off. Williams had some good stuff up his sleeves for the farmer. Requiescat in Pace!

Hon. FRED GREEN

Mayor of Ionia

Fred endorses most of the policies of Groesbeck with rare good taste since borrowed thunder is better than no thunder at all. If it so happens Fred is elected, which is unlikely, there will be a wild stampede to snap up the appointive offices which of course must be changed. We very much doubt if the electorate of Michigan want to tear up things and interfere with road building and a lot of other good work.

Annual Commencement Exercises

The annual Commencement exercises of North Adams High School took place at Community Hall on Thursday evening June 10th and as usual the crowd was large and appreciative. This season the graduates numbered 17, young ladies and gentlemen who will go out into the world with the brightest possible prospects—having been fortunate in instructors and fortunate in living in a day and age of the world when American intelligence and American education ranks second to none.

The opening march was rendered by Haydn's Orchestra to the stirring strains of which the participants marched to the stage and took their places among banks of lovely flowers and amid artistic trimmings. Rev. Virgil Hunt of the Congregational church pronounced the invocation after which came the salutatory by Gerald Wells. The class rendered the official song; Louise Roberts as president of the class gave her address; she was followed by Edna Holkins who gave "Reminisensces of the Class of '26"; Lemuel Rhodes gave "Contemplation of Class of '26"; and M. Lucy Foster "Possibilities of Class of '26."

The orchestra again rendered a selection, followed by the Valedictory delivered very creditably by A. Lucile VanWert.

Speaker of the evening was Prof. Lionel G. Crocker of Ann Arbor, who gave a splendid address from the text "Keeping Alive" and it certainly gave the class a wonderful uplift and food for thought.

Exercises of the School year of 1926 were now nearing the end, when Superintendent R. C. Young arose to present the last token of appreciation to his co-laborers and pupils His remarks were feelingly given after which Rev. Hunt pronounced the benediction and the Orchestra broke into the strains of the postlude bringing to a close one of the most pleasaut of annnal events of the villagen.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

House Ratifies Settlement of French Debt—Egypt May Lose Independence.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SO FAR as the house of representatives is concerned, the settlement of the French war debt to the United States which was reached by the foreign debt commission and Ambassador Berenger is accepted. The Burton bill ratifying the arrangement was passed by a vote of 236 to 112, after the house had rejected a motion to recommit with instructions to the ways and means committee to hold the measure until the funding arrangement is approved by the French parliament.

Eighty-eight Democrats voted in the negative on the bill, and were joined by twenty Republicans, two Farmer-Laborites and one Socialist. Fifty-one Democrats and one Socialist voted in the affirmative with 184 Republicans. The measure now goes to the senate, which, however, will await action by the French parliament. Unless this is forthcoming within two weeks the senate probably will not pass the bill before next winter, which would be a great disappointment to the administration.

The settlement, as ratified in the bill, is estimated by the treasury to be a 50 per cent settlement as compared with a 26 per cent settlement with Italy and an 80 per cent settlement with Great Britain, the percentages being based on the proportion of the total principal plus interest at 4½ per cent to be paid. The debt is to be funded over a 62-year period with no interest for the first five years, after which interest shall commence at 1 per cent, increasing to 3½ per cent in 1965.

WITHOUT a record vote the senate passed the house bill designed to build up the army air service and creating the office of second assistant secretary of war who would be charged with the supervision of the air corps and the co-ordination of its activities with other governmental agencies. The senate also passed the navy air expansion bill, and both measures went to conference.

WHILE the senate judiciary subcommittee was deciding that all prohibition measures should be shelved, there were two outstanding pronouncements on the booze question. Senator Borah of Idaho, addressing the Presbyterians assembled in Baltimore, came out so strongly in favor of prohibition and against the attempts to weaken enforcement that he was immediately hailed by the most enthusiastic drys as their national leader and a fit man to be nominated for President by the Republicans in 1928. Certain political speculators who have been trying to find signs of the waning of Coolidge's strength called attention to the fact that the Anti-Saloon leaders have kept away from the White House ever since the President made it clear he was not disposed to let Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews be disciplined for his testimony before the senate committee, and made the most of this in their guessing that the drys were preparing to oppose the renomination of Coolidge.

Borah was unsparing in his denunciation of liquor and the liquor traffic, but, being a conservative constitutionalist, he made his strongest point when he said:

"Even a greater question than the liquor question is the capacity of the American people for constitutional government. The question of the hour is: Shall we live up to and enforce that provision of the Constitution until in the orderly method pointed out by the Constitution we see fit to change it? Can we enforce the law which we have deliberately made?

"It is perhaps as definite and specific a challenge of our love for the Constitution, our capacity for self-government, as could be presented to our people. I am infinitely more concerned about the willingness and ability of our people to meet that test than I am about the liquor traffic, brutal and ruthless as I know it to be."

ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE, former senator from Indiana, whose opinions on such matters are always worthy of consideration, severely criticized the recent order of President Coolidge empowering local officers to become agents of the government to help in prohibition enforcement. Mr. Beveridge was addressing the Historical society of Pennsylvania, and said in part:

"To make local officials also federal officials is in practical effect to destroy our political subdivisions, or, at the very least, to subject towns, cities, counties and state to a national control centralized at Washington.

"The former officer of our regular army who devised this change in the American system and who is in charge of the execution of it, tells us the constitutional pretext for it. He says that the hitherto exclusive police power of the states is now shared by the central government. If this military and bureaucratic exposition of constitutional law is sound, the planners and builders of American institutions wrought in vain.

"It is obvious that if local officials can be made national officials to execute one national law, they can be made agents of a general and centralized government to enforce other national laws in every locality. If a careful President, like our present chief executive, would use wisely this unlimited and essentially autocratic power, a heedless President might use it recklessly."

The house judiciary committee has asked Attorney General Sargent for an extended opinion on the legality of the President's order, and also has requested Mr. Coolidge to give it an expression of the limits to be placed on the system if it is legal, the states in which it will be invoked and the salaries which will be paid to municipal or state officials drafted into the federal service.

REPRESENTATIVE TINKHAM of Massachusetts wants the house to investigate the Anti-Saloon league's capitol pay roll and to compel a disclosure of its congressional campaign expenditures. He more than intimates that the league pays congressmen for introducing or supporting bills. This Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the league, flatly denies, and he declares the wet organizations are more in need of investigation than is the league.

CHARGES and counter-charges made exceedingly lively the closing week of the Republican senatorial primary campaign in Iowa. Senator Reed of Pennsylvania brought to the senate's attention the fact that Brookhart campaign literature had been inserted in franked envelopes with a speech which Reed had made opposing the unseating of Brookhart, and mailed to Iowa voters. Brookhart and his campaign manager denied responsibility for this and the former declared it was a "frame-up bearing the earmarks of the Daugherty gang."

Major Lund, campaign manager for Brookhart, sent this telegram to Senator Reed of Missouri:

"Reports that Cummins campaign forces using an unlimited amount of money, estimated at $500,000, and backed by federal and state patronage. State now flooded with paid Cummins workers in districts, counties and even precincts. As striking contrast, we have Brookhart, a poor man, backed only by people of Iowa and campaign committee laboring day and night to conduct a campaign with entire expenditure not exceeding $5,000."

Managers for Cummins said their organization was large but that all the workers were contributing their time free.

EGYPT may soon lose its recently acquired independence and again become a protectorate of Great Britain. At this writing it all seems to depend on Zagloul Pasha, whose party won a great victory in the elections but whose return to the premiership will scarcely be tolerated by the British government. The situation is aggravated by the action of the Egyptian assize court which recently acquitted six out of seven persons accused of political assassinations and other crimes. Judge Kershaw, British president of the court, resigned in protest, and the British government has declared to the Egyptian government that it does not accept the court's judgment and reserves full liberty to take what steps it considers necessary to protect the safety of foreigners. As a precautionary measure a warship was sent from Malta to Alexandria. Official opinion in London was that the situation was "distinctly grave." The trouble goes back to the murder of Sirdar Sir Lee Stack in November, 1924, by Nationalists. Zagloul, a Nationalist leader, then resigned as premier. He always has been considered unfriendly to Great Britain. Some of the murderers of Stack were executed. Those recently acquitted also were accused of this crime and Lord Lloyd, British high commissioner, says the court was so influenced by Zagloul's electoral victory that it did not dare pass sentence on them, though the evidence of their guilt was complete.

MARSHAL PILSUDSKI didn't want to be president of Poland, after all. He was elected by the national assembly, but declined the honor because he had no confidence in the people who elected him. He still insisted that the constitution must be changed. Next day the assembly chose for president Prof. Ignatz Moscicki of Lemburg college, admittedly a simple instrument in the hands of the dictator. The situation in Poland is confusing and dangerous. The Warsaw correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says:

"Nobody in Poland, even Marshal Pilsudski's closest friends, can get an expression from him on his program or plans. Nobody in Poland knows from where to expect orders or instructions, nor where the ship of state is drifting. The police and public services are becoming demoralized."

The opposition to Pilsudski is growing stronger and bolder daily, and he may be eliminated unless he stages another military coup.

WOMEN in attendance at the International Suffrage alliance convention in Paris had a lovely week of scrapping, the main result of which was the victory of the conservative element in the exclusion of the delegates from the National Woman's Party of America. The latter demands equality of all rights for women while the League of Women Voters of America, which won in the struggle, believes the women should be especially protected in industry by law. The Woman's party representatives were supported by a number of liberals from other countries, and later these forced the adoption by the congress of two measures which amount to a demand for equality in certain forms of industrial legislation. The defeated women, headed by Mrs. Belmont, began laying the foundations for a new international association which, while not hostile to the alliance, will work solely for equal rights in everything.

FOR the first time in history a native-born American has captured the British amateur golf championship. Jess Sweetser accomplished this feat in impressive style at Muirfield, Scotland. Then the American Walker cup team, of which Sweetser was a member, went into action at St. Andrews, winning three of the four two-ball foursomes the first day. The second day the Yankees clinched the possession of the trophy by winning three of the eight individual matches. The British won four and one was all square.

MILITARY leaders in Portugal have accomplished a bloodless coup d'etat and the cabinet and President Machado have resigned. Commander Cabecadas, Gen. Gomez da Costa and Senator Carmona now control the government.

UNDER most trying conditions the American balloon Goodyear III won the Gordon Bennett trophy race which started in Belgium. Another American entry got second place.

Qualities Needed by "Ideal Club Husband"

Atlantic City.—The wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Job, the skill of David's body servant and the iron will of Jonah, who would not give in to the whale, go to make up the "ideal club husband," as publicly pledged and privately described by members of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs.

"The ideal club husband must, of course, be interested in women's public activities, must encourage her in them, must go to conventions with her and help her and the other women in all the ways a man can, as my husband does," Mrs. Charles Sloan of Philadelphia told the Associated Press. Mrs. Sloan pledged $10 from the floor, as she announced, "in honor of an ideal club husband."

"This is the third big convention which my husband has attended with me," she said. "We have been married forty years. His qualities? Oh, he is just a good man, and I guess that covers a lot. Perhaps a sense of humor is a help to a club husband."

"The ideal club husband must have wisdom and energy and foresight, so that his talents can fill in where the woman's leaves off," says Mrs. Walter B. Leach, president of the Brookline (Mass.) Women's club, who pledged $10 "for the club husbands, and for my twenty-ninth anniversary with mine."

The state winning the prize for the best health summary was announced to be Ohio.

POULTRY

COCCIDIOSIS IS FATAL AILMENT

One of the most serious maladies which poultry-farm owners have to combat is coccidiosis, a destructive disease, especially prevalent on poultry farms where a large number of birds are raised on a limited area.

Chickens between the ages of four and fourteen weeks are the most likely to contract the infection, and suffer the greatest mortality, according to B. A. Beach of the veterinary science department at the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, in a recent circular published by the college. He says that although adult birds often contract the disease, they seldom die directly from it.

The disease is the result of infection by a small parasite, known as the coccidium, which is spread in the droppings of infected birds. Beach, in outlining the symptoms of the trouble, says that the first to be noticed is the appearance of blood in the droppings; following this, the chick usually becomes listless; its feathers become ruffled, and its wings droop. Contaminated soil and water are the chief carriers of infection, as are certain adult birds, which are infected, though showing no outward signs of the disease. Such hens are a continuous source of infection and a menace to all chicks that are permitted to run with them.

"No medicinal treatment has yet been found of sufficient value to warrant its use," Beach declares. "Sanitation is both the preventive and the cure," he says.

As soon as coccidiosis is diagnosed, Beach says the steps to be taken are to remove all of the apparently healthy chicks to clean quarters—feed the chicks inside brooder houses—remove all litter from the brooder house twice weekly—withhold all mash, and feed light on scratch feed, and keep sour milk before the chicks at all times.

Farmer Who Balances His Poultry Ration Gets Most

Laying hens need a balanced ration. This fact is demonstrated by an experiment completed recently by the South Dakota State college poultry department, in which two pens of 25 hens each were fed under the same conditions but with different rations. In one case the hens were given all the corn, oats, wheat and barley they would eat. The hens in the other pen received these same grains but in addition were given a 20 per cent meat mash in order to make the ration balanced.

A summary of the results of this experiment indicates that the hens on corn, oats, wheat and barley averaged 27.64 eggs per bird for the two-months period. The hens that received the meat mash in their ration averaged 36.56 eggs per hen. The cost of the feed was practically the same in both cases because the first pen ate enough more grain to balance the cost of the meat mash, thus proving that the farmer who will balance his poultry ration will receive a greater profit.

Mortality Loss in Baby Chicks May Be Prevented

According to a report from the extension division, Ohio State university, a record from 300 farmers shows that the mortality loss in baby chicks up to the age of ten weeks was 20.3 per cent. This probably is a conservative estimate as no doubt a farmer who is progressive enough to keep records is more apt to give his chicks better care than will the average farmer. The chief causes of these losses may be summarized as follows: Weak chicks, diarrhea, crowding, leg weakness, cannibalism, coccidiosis and intestinal worms.

A great deal may be done in preventing these losses by adhering closely to the five essentials of chick raising advocated by the University of Missouri. These are:

1. Hatch early.
2. Brood each hatch separately for four weeks.
3. Range on fresh ground.
4. Feed a balanced ration constantly.
5. Separate pullets and cockerels.

To Regulate Incubator

If it seems impossible to regulate the incubator, examine the wafer and see whether or not it still has the ether which causes expansion and consequent regulation of the thermostat. The wafers are filled with ether which will evaporate through a very small leak. Detach the suspected wafer, and shake close to the ear. If the liquid is in it, you will hear it shake, and the trouble is not there. If there is no sound of liquid, buy a new wafer and save time, money and worry.

Best Feed for Beginner

Chick rations are numerous, and one of the best feeds for the beginner with a small flock is the commercial dried buttermilk starting mash. This can be fed in hoppers and placed before the chicks at all times. These commercial mashes are used by many commercial poultrymen with good results. A large number of egg producers who mix their own laying mash, depend on the commercial starters for bringing the chicks through the critical period.

Clean Ground Is Vital

It cannot too often be repeated that chickens need to be placed on clean ground. If it is not possible to place them on a different part of the farm, then the old chicken yard should by all means be plowed up so that the soil is aerated and well exposed to sunshine. If you move the chickens to a new location, plow up the old lots and plant them to oats, rye [illegible] most anything that will make a good vigorous growth. This will kill all [illegible]sites.

SHOULD HUSBANDS DO HOUSE WORK?

How Mrs. Dyer Solved the Problem.

Mrs. Mildred Dyer was lucky. She had a good-natured husband who helped her with much of her housework. Because she was in ill health for five years it was often necessary for him to do this. But it bothered Mrs. Dyer. She felt that he had to work hard enough anyway. The time he spent in doing her work was needed for his own. She determined to find the road to better health.

She writes: "I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is simply wonderful. My health is better than it has ever been. I am getting stronger and gaining in weight."

She has solved her problem and her household is happier. The Dyers live at Redlands, Calif., Route A, Box 183.

How often does your husband have to do your housework? No matter how willing he is, no woman feels comfortable about it. Perhaps you, too, will find better health through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Our sleeping apartment is about ten feet square, and brother's somewhat smaller. Our bedstead and the straw mattress, on which I assure thee we sleep very comfortably, are both of his manufacture. In each chamber we have a looking glass, a toilet table (that is a covered box) and a couple of pictures. Our books are arranged on shelves against the partition, and with the floors covered with carpeting, curtains at the windows, and the chests containing our clothes to sit on, if needful, the room really looks very comfortable Feathers and chairs are not procurable here, but we fortunately find that we can do without them until they are so. How very little is actually necessary to supply our wants if we can but think so, and in our case we have so much, so very much to be thankful for, that we cannot regard as a straw's value such trivial discomforts.

On the first night we slept here, we were, every one even, awakened by the sound of the wind among the trees around us. Poor little Emily jumped up and came to our bedside in a great fright calling upon aunt Ruth, and as I listened to it, it reminded me of nothing so much as being beside the great water-fall—it came on with such a steady mountainous rush—while aunt Ruth thought only of the steam boat and the lake—We have not since been disturbed by such strong winds, and perhaps, because we have become accustomed to it, and when the winds are still thee can scarcely imagine a more total quietness than that which really surrounds us. A sound is quite a strange thing, especially if it is near us, for we are far off the road though the voice of cultivated life frequently comes on the clear air from the neighboring farms to remind us that we are not quite in solitude. We have not heard the howl of a wolf since we moved. Nor have we had any communication with the Indians. I have seen but four, I think, since we arrived here in Lenawee County.

Brother is busily employed, whenever the weather is suitable, in felling trees to clear free his ground and when it is storming he works within up stairs at his trade. He intends, when he has leisure, to make us some tables, a settee, etc also to enclose a small shed over the well, which is but a few feet from the house, for a summer kitchen. "There is not a bit of danger but Thomas will do well." said neighbor Comstock the other day, and as for uncle Darius, as he is universally called by those as old or older than himself, I actually love him, for the share which he has given Tom of his good graces. and in truth he is a man whose good opinion any one may well value. He is a real gem. One of those characters that put you so much in a good humor with human nature.—His wife is a very fine woman, quite deserving of him.

Daniel Smith, our preacher and his wife are another clever, honest hearted couple, though with them as with our neighbors generally, we are less acquainted, except aunt Sally Comstock.

There is considerable difference in some of the modes and customs here from such as we have been accustomed to. For instance we are told that it is the fashion here for strangers to pay the first visit, and on First day evenings the women. the gallery Friends even (by the way, they got aunt Ruth seated in among them the other day at meeting) get out their sewing or their knitting and work as industriously as if it was the most privileged working of them all, without so much as a vision of a scruple about the matter. But do not imagine there is anything more than an ideal gallery in our meeting house. I speak of it only as it exists in my imagination, in the place where it should be.

Thee requests me to mention the price of different articles. For a cow and a calf we paid twenty four dollers, pigs two; pork is worth five dollars per hundred; wheat seventy five cents a bushel; corn fifty cents; potatoes, at present thirty seven and one half.

Thomas has not yet purchased oxen as he did not wish the expense of providing food for them through the winter. Horses are not yet much used on account of their being more troublesome for new settlers to provide for. People sometimes employ their oxen even to carry them to meeting. The rapid ingress of population affords a ready market for all kinds of produce and probably will do so until a canal or railroad facilitates its carriage to Monroe or Detroit. About forty families have settled in the township during the last year.

There is at present but one black smith at Adrian, and he is a kind of "jack at all trades" that is, his work is seldom performed punctually. Iron work is performed at the rate of two shillings per hundred.

I assure thee that we go to rest with quite as much security in our lonely cottage as we did when barricaded behind "bolts and bars", with the watchman passing on his nightly promenade beneath our windows. For the first few nights we slept here, our doors, the outside ones I mean, and they were in fact, the only ones we had, were not even so much as latched. They had swollen with the damp weather before we came and we preferred having them shrink again by the heat of the fire, than to have them planed to fit and induce large cracks afterwards. So we merely laid a stick against each of them to prevent them from blowing open and retired quite satisfied and unconcerned. We do usually now put a nail or gimlet over the latch but I believe it is more from the remains of old habit than anything else. Our fears are certainly not strong enough to induce us to get up to supply the fastening when it happens to be forgotten.

With much love, dear aunt, to thyself and the rest of our friends, and wishes for a Happy New Year, I must as I have just had an opportunity of sending this, conclude.

Thine affectionately,

E. M. C.

Darkest Africa

Rev. and Mrs. Earl Harris, Anwerp Young People, Missionaries In Western Part of that Continent sent the following letter to friends at Antwerp, Ohio:

American Protestant Mission,
Yaounde, Cameroon,
West Africa,
March 8, 1926.

My Dear Friends:

We sailed from Mameilles on the Touareg in the evening of Jan. 8, and for two days on the Mediterranean sea al was lovely for the sea was calm, We passed the Rock of Gibralter early Monday morning and came out into the Atlantic in the midst of a storm. It gradually grew worse and for four days and nights that little flat bottomed boat pitched and tossed and creaked in its effort to conquer the angry waves which often ran higher than the ship itself. I was dreadfully sea-sick which wasn't at all pleasant, but anyhow its a satisfaction to know that all the things that have been said about seasickness are not an exaggeration.

The trip on the west coast is an interesting one. The Touareg is one of the largest and nicest of the coast boats, but since they all carry freight as well as mail and passengers, we stopped from two to three days in nearly every port. Dakar, capital of Occidental Francaise. was our first stop and also our first glimpse of African negro life. I shall never forget that picture as we drew near into the harbor, there they were, a great crowd of them on the wharf, dressed in all manner, color and description of rags drawn around them in every conceivable way and oh, the pathetic look on their faces. I think Conokry, French Guinea, was the most beautiful of the ports that we saw. The streets run parallel and have wonderful old trees growing on either side like our American towns. There is no harbor at most of the ports, so the boats are obliged to anchor as close as possible and load and unload passengers and all by means of a large basket which is let down by the crane into small boats and taken ashore. When we arrived at Tabou, Ivory Coast, we could see the natives running in all directions, coming from their little huts and from the forest, getting ready to come out to meet us. Before long two little boat loads were fast paddling their way out and singing as they came. They were in true native style—only loin cloths. They are very clever swimmers and as soon as they arrived three of their number jumped into the water and turned somersaults and then asked for coins. As the passengers tossed them money. they dived down sometimes several feet, caught them and then came up to show they had been successful, placed the coins in their mouths and asked for more. Soon out on the horizon we could see a tiny canoe battling with the waves and as it came nearer we saw that it was a hollowed out log just wide enough for one man to sit in. In one end he had several nice fish which he wished to trade for bread. He made signs that he was hungry and finally one of the stewards gave him a piece of bread, half of which he ate and the other half he placed in a cloth hung it around his neck and made off to shore as happy as though he had received a hundred dollars. We made several other stops also which helped to break the monotony of the trip even though the sights were all very much alike. We arrived in Douala, Feb. 1st and were met by Mr. Whittier, an old McCormick friend and Mr. Adams the treasurer of our mission, and it certainly was good to see some real friends, Our motor so generously given by friends also awaited us, but as there is no auto road into the interior from Doula, we made hurried plans to get a little weekly train which goes in as far as Mekak every Wednesday.

We had a good trip in spite of the intense heat. Africa is very pretty with its many varieties of tropical trees—especially palm fruit trees, Here and there we stopped at the little stations and always a crowd, clad only in loin cloths were there curious to see or to sell bananas. About the middle of the afternoon we left the flat country and came into the hills, in some cases almost mountains and of course it's needless to say that that part of this country appeals especially to us for we feel more at home there if the trees are tropical instead of pine. We reached Mekah about seven o'clock in the evening There is one way traffic on the road between Mekak and Yaounde autos going one way every six hours so Mr. Harris and Mr. Whittier prepared our Harley (which had come along on the little train with us) and his Indian for the trip. At midnight we were again on our way, arriving at Yaounde mission at six o'clock the next morning.

The Voice of the Liberty Bell
The Sesquicentennial International Exposition Philadelphia
June First To 1926 December First

This is one of the two new official posters of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, opening in Philadelphia June 1 to celebrate 150 years of American Independence. The Exposition will continue to December 1. Dan Smith, the artist, has symbolized the epoch in history which the tolling of the Liberty Bell in Independence Hall, July 4, 1776, marked and has depicted the growth of the United States from the original thirteen states, represented by the thirteen stars which emerge from the mouth of the Liberty Bell.

A FIRST LADY

Mrs. W. Freeland Kendrick, wife of the Mayor of Philadelphia, who also is president of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition Association, organized to stage a great celebration to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Mrs. Kendrick is shown beside the historic Liberty Bell, which she tapped at a recent broadcasting event when the world was told of completion of plans for the big exposition.

MRS. HOOVER TURNS BRICKLAYER

BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA

Mrs. Herbert Hoover, wife of the Secretary of Commerce in President Coolidge's cabinet, is shown laying the cornerstone for the model home being erected by Better Homes in America organization at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, in Philadelphia, June 1 to December 1 to celebrate 150 years of American Independence. Opposite Mrs. Hoover stands Mrs. Vance McCormick of Harrisburg. The Girl Scouts grouped around the women will operate the house.

Motion Pictures, Lawlessness and Drunkenness

Some bad pictures are advertised by the industry as showing the conditions brought about among our young people by the Volstead law and sub-titles presenting the same idea are used upon the screen when these same pictures are shown. The 18th Amendment and the Volstead law have had nothing to do with the lawless and social laxity among certain classes of American young people. The violators of that law and the motion pictures which lionize that violation, and which make social laxity their constant theme, have had much to do with many of our social and moral problems. Not with ours alone, the anti-prohibition propaganda which we find upon the screen unfortunately is reaching far beyond our own shores. American prohibition is being mis represented and ridiculed among the nations of the world, because without Federal regulation, we have no way to check this misrepresentation.

One might go on indefinitely dis cussing the relation of motion pictures to lawlessness. Not only is the violation of every moral law presented again and again, not only is lawlessness of every kind made to appear inviting, but the details of crime are so presented that the picture often becomes a school of methods for the criminal and the moron. During the past five years 10,000 boys between 16 and 21 have been confined to the Tombs of New York City.

In the same period 13,688 boys and girls have been held in Brook lyn jails. The increase in criminality in these cities in five years has been about 100 per cent. The same condition prevails in many other cities and towns. Something is ser iously wrong when the young people of the nation express in their lives such a distorted sense of values. Unfortunately, the case is one that cannot be easily diagnosed. There are many influences and conditions of environment which give rise to this situation. Yet who shall say how great was the influence of the motion pictures first seen in the earliest years of childhood and little by little stamping indelibly their standards and their viewpoint upon the sensitive tablets of the mind?

The responsibility that rests upon the Motion Picture Industry as millions of children and young people see the pictures every day, can not be overemphasized. Our first task is to bring that responsibility before them by approval of the good and disapproval of the evil in these pictures. Often by their own acknowledgment we are assured that for some reason, prob ably the hope of financial gain, they do not measure up to that responsibility. Their own papers constantly speak of pictures with scenes of brutality and indecency as "containing everything" to get the box receipts. Clearly then we must make an organized effort to discourage the attendance at the theaters when pictures with objec tionable scenes are shown. However, the evidence of an organized attack upon the Sabbath day, the Prohibition amendment, the sanctity of the marriage relation, and the Christian ideals that have made America a leader of the nations of the world, calls for definite action upon a much larger scale. As men for personal profit were willing to pervert the physical appetite by creating a desire for strong drink, we find here an organized effort to pervert the spiritual hungers of the soul and to create an appetite for the salacious and the vicious in our social and moral relations. This situation calls for an organized effort to secure legal power by which the menace of objectional pictures may be authoritatively checked. The responsibility rests upon the Amer ican people to remove the "stumbling block" of evil pictures from before the feet of the children and to stabilize production by definite standards and ideals. The good pictures bear silent but impressive testimony to the recreational, edu cational and inspirational value which should be common to all pic tures.—National W. C. T. U. Pub lishing House.

Many parents as well as girls are asking in regard to camp, What do the girls do all day? So, if we can imagine ourselves at Hemlock Lake we will go through the details of the day somewhat as follows,—

The rising bell at 6:30 summons all who are so disposed to a morning dip in the lake. Girls are not urged to this but many turn out for the brisk setting-up exercises and the run down the sandy path to the lake. In a few minutes they are back again, routing out the slower ones for the flag raising. This is short but serious and impressive, the honor of raising the flag being given to some girl who has shown good camp spirit.

Then they break line and in little groups hasten to the screened dining room made possible last year by gifts from interested friends An instant's hush and the beauty of the surroundings deepens the accent of worship in the fresh young voices that chant, "Still, still with Thee when purple morning breaketh." The merry chatter breaks out again while fruit, cereals, toast, cocoa and cookies disappear at surprising rate. Every thing seems to taste better here and the "eats" are enthusiastically praised at every meal.

The leaders withdraw to the cottage for a short council while the girls make beds and get their tents ready for inspection. This duty is performed by two of the girls who place a flag over the neatest tent.

The camp council consisting of one girl from each tent holds a short meeting for the assignment of camp duties, and then the call comes for assembly. This is held on the shady side of a little hill, with hymns and devotions led by one of the girls, announcements for the day and suggestions from the camp director.

Then comes half an hour of Bible study, where the principles of Christ are applied to the aspects of modern girl life. After that are camp duties such as kitchen police sanitation, etc. Often there is a game of ball or some other group game, or classes in handicraft, then swimming. Here every precaution is taken for the girls safety and in struction given. Nearly every beginner learns to swim before she leaves camp, while second year girls must learn three strokes and three floats before they can receive an honor in swimming.

Dinner follows swimming, one of the plain well-cooked and well balanced meals so thoroughly enjoyed. Then the call, "Store open" brings everyone up to the cottage. The "store" is merely a table spread with boxes of gum, milk, chocolate, mints, etc. where a girls' sweet tooth can be satisfied in limited quantities. When she came to camp, each girl deposited all her money in the "bank", on which she now draws checks to pay for her purchase. Rest hour is next when books are read, letters written or naps indulged in. The main part of the afternoon is spent in some organized recreation, such as ball games or hikes, followed by another period of swimming.

With another simple ceremony the flag is lowered and everyone is again ready for eats with the usual accompaniment of songs, jokes and laughter. Coming back again down the path a group is soon busy gathering material for the evening camp fire. Someone starts the little victrola and every one enjoys half an hour or more of folk dances. No Delesarte of a generation ago equalled these for graceful physical exercise, and such fun besides.

When the flames of the camp fire begin to light up the dusk of the evening, the girls gather in a circle about the fire to sing, tell stories and enjoy a stunt put on by one of the tents.

Promptly at nine o'clock comes good night with the camp nurse making the rounds to see that everyone is all right. A few bursts of laughter, a little sleepy conversation and quiet descends again on Camp Namroun.

During the day they have gained in cooperation, have learned to sub ordinate personal interests when best for the good of the whole, have gained something in physical development, have done some rather unpleasant duties promptly and cheerfully and have unconsciously felt the influence of God in nature.

To Hold Farm Day At M. S. C. July 30th

The annual summer Farmers Day at M. S. C. will be held on Friday, July 30, this year, and plans are being completed at East Lansing for the entertainment of one of the largest agricultural meetings in the history of the state.

Since the start of the Farmers Day meetings in 1918, this combined summer conference and picnic has grown so rapidly that it has become the outstanding meeting of its kind in the state. In 1925, in spite of a steady rain which fell most of the day, actual count at the gates showed more than 8,000 farmers and their families checked in for the day.

With good weather, it is predicted at the College that this figure will be surpassed on July 30.

Most of the old features of the Farmers Day program are to be retained this year, with the addition of new entertainment stunts. Inspecting of the extensive college experimental plots and field, visits to the livestock herds and orchards and informal conference with agricultural specialists will occupy the morning. A big general meeting, with one or two nationally known speakers and a band concert, will be held in the afternoon.

Details of the entertainment side of the program will be announced later, according to Dean R. S. Shaw chairman of the Farmers Day Committee.

HERO AND HEROINE

Here's a new kind of story of the West—a romance of hydraulic engineering. Mining, ranching, lumbering and railroad building have been the favorite subjects of the fictionists and many a good story have they given us. Here's a new kind of hero—a young New Englander born under the zodiac sign of Aquarius and destined to be in very truth a "Water Bearer." The heroine is a "native daughter" of California. And around the water-bearing exploit of the Eastern man and the Western girl revolve fascinating adventures "by flood and field" and a story of true love that runs far from smoothly at times. As for the author—why, he's J. Allan Dunn, whose Western stories have deservedly won for him a wide popularity. And here East meets West—and a stirring romance grows out of the meeting.

The Canyon

Caleb Warner conscientiously fished every foot of the likeliest-looking hole he had seen on Hermanos creek, but there came no rise, no eager tug, no submerged gleam of a rainbow's shimmering flank.

He waded ashore, put up rod and tackle, climbed through the thick, tall ferns and brambly undergrowth to the narrow trail and turned upstream. All the day was his, the next, for that matter, and he fancied the fishing would be better higher up. Caleb walked with his coat tucked between the slings of his creel, his shirt open at the throat; lean, long, well-shouldered and slender-flanked, tanned of skin, springy of action, generally good to look at. By the canons of moving pictures and magazine illustrations he was not handsome. New England ancestry had made him too aquiline of feature, but he had youth and strength, his gray eyes were clear, his forehead high to his straight, close-cropped hair, his lips clean-cut and his chin well forward, not too narrow. His general make-up was typically American, Yankee-American, unmarred by inbreeding.

Below him Hermanos creek sang, half hidden by the undergrowth. His economic, New England brain saw potentiality going to waste. In Massachusetts Hermanos creek would long ago have been harnessed. Mills and factories would have sprung up along its banks. Here was water for steam, for turbines, for commercial and domestic use, for irrigation; all unused, its energy seemingly doomed, for there was a peculiar thing about the creek that Caleb, as an engineer, had noted. Contrary to the habit of most well-mannered watercourses, its volume diminished as it flowed.

He was twenty-seven, six years out of the college chrysalis that he had spun at Columbia. He had served in the war, hard, practical service in tasks that were low-grade but necessary, the crude, swift work of building and repairing war-roads and bridges, and in it Caleb Warner had, in large measure, found himself. He had acquired initiative, resource, command of men, if nothing else. And he had come out unscathed, unwounded, ungassed, reduced to an acme of coordination, sane mind and sound body. He had been granted wider horizons. So he had come west to find his oyster—and to open it.

Swiftly the woody cave of the canyon became a tunnel, the creek now far below him in a water-chiseled gorge. The tunnel became a gut. A suspension bridge, a shivery thing of wire rope and short planks, anchored with wire cables to high walls of rock, crossed the gorge. It shook under his tread and hung trembling as he stopped midway to look at the gush of compressed water surging through the gap, twenty feet down. There were signs on the rock that at times the creek rose close to the flooring.

Before him, to the south, lay Hermanos valley, a green bowl lipped by rolling hills, their crests bronzed by the summer sun, blazoned with great patches of golden poppies, with clumps of purple lupine, the lower slopes furred thick with wild oats waving in the wind, oats as high as Caleb's head, a shimmering sea of emerald and silver.

He stood for a while undecided whether to adventure on to the waterfall or to stay where he was until it was time to fish down the canyon with the hope of better results than the three trout his persistence had lured from the creek. He had a book tucked into his pocket but he was not tired. And he had lunched an hour before.

The view held him. Looking down, he saw that the stream was a vagrant, that, in the rains, one bed was not enough to convey its waters. A second course, now dry and partly grown over, erratically paralleled the actual creek. Willows bordered it.

Along this idle water-track, racing so fast it seemed a gray streak, head down, brush lowered, a coyote ran at top speed, pursued, not hunting, covering ground at a frantic pace, pressed to its utmost by fear.

After it, perhaps fifty yards away but gaining at every bound, sped a gallant, beautiful hound, white-coated, taper-muzzled, bearing its tail like a great plume, overhauling the coyote with tremendous leaps, going at a terrific rate, yet so smoothly that its speed seemed effortless—a Russian wolfhound.

Beyond the willow fringe came her mate, bound for bound, level with the bitch, unseen, though perhaps not unknown to the coyote.

Then, from a thicker growth of trees, outmatched but traveling fast, a pinto flashed into Caleb's view, a boy crouched low on the withers, welded to the horse, urging it on.

Caleb thrilled to the chase as it swept on beneath him, admiring the horsemanship of the figure in breeches, puttees and fluttering blouse, a little envious of it.

"Gad, he can ride," he muttered.

A cap blew off, a long tress of chestnut hair, ruddy as a flame, whipped out, was reached for and tucked in by its owner, only to stream errant again. The boy was a girl!

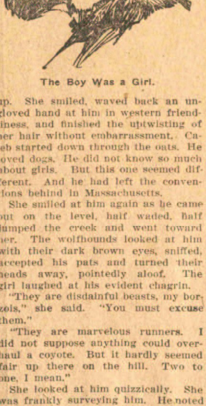
The bitch was almost up with the coyote, the dog, watchful through the gaps in the willows, came circling in, jaws agape, ready for the kill. The coyote made a last desperate effort. The bitch, with one enormous leap, came abreast. She lunged, her white neck like a snake's for speed and sinuousness, her teeth clamping down on the forefoot of the coyote. Caleb saw the latter checked, tumbling, heard a broken snarl of defiance, and then the second hound sprang in a white gleam of fury, too swiftly for him to catch the action. Its powerful jaws, bred for the work, crunched through the vertebrae of the coyote's neck. The hunt was ended.

The girl rode up at a gallop, checked the pony in midstride and slid to the turf while the two hounds thrust their muzzle at her. With one hand she patted them while with the other she strove to coil up her hair, now fairly down her shoulders, reaching to her belt.

"Good boy, Saratof! Good girl, Siva!"

Caleb heard her faintly but plainly and shouted down his own meed of applause. He had left most of his innate reserve behind him in Europe and the stir of the hunt still held him.

"Bully for both of them!" he cried and waved his hat as the girl looked up. She smiled, waved back an ungloved hand at him in western friendliness, and finished the uptwisting of her hair without embarrassment. Caleb started down through the oats. He loved dogs. He did not know so much about girls. But this one seemed different. And he had left the conventions behind in Massachusetts.



The Boy Was a Girl.

She smiled at him again as he came out on the level, half waded, half jumped the creek and went toward her. The wolfhounds looked at him with their dark brown eyes, sniffed, accepted his pats and turned their heads away, pointedly aloof. The girl laughed at his evident chagrin.

"They are disdainful beasts, my borzois," she said. "You must excuse them."

"They are marvelous runners. I did not suppose anything could overhaul a coyote. But it hardly seemed fair up there on the hill. Two to one, I mean."

She looked at him quizzically. She was frankly surveying him. He noted that she was about six inches shorter than he was—which made her five feet six—that she was at once slim and rounded, that she had a short straight nose and a mouth that was neither small nor large, neither full-lipped nor narrow, a round chin, a dimple in one cheek, and that her eyes were the exact color of the lupines. Also that there was no nonsense about her. A part of Caleb's curriculum, a majority of his experience, had consisted in the training of his powers of observation. In the brief glances he had permitted himself he had done very well.

"There are not very many coyotes where you come from?" she queried.

"How do you know?" She laughed and he added that and her teeth to the catalogue. Both were, to his taste, perfect.

"How do I know? I am sure now. Does anyone but a Yank reply to a question with another one?"

"Yank! Are you a southerner?"

"There you go again. Wait. I must answer your charge against my dogs. If you think it was not sporting to set Saratof and Siva against one coyote, how about my helpless calf that was butchered last night? And half a dozen others this summer. And a colt! There are probably fifty coyotes who make this valley their larder. Gabilan shelters scores of them. And these two have accounted for nine of them. It is sheer justice, administered mercifully. The coyote always has the start. It is killed instantly, not worried, not touched afterward. My borzois don't eat carrion."

"Acquitted," answered Caleb. "I beg their pardons. I am a Yankee from Massachusetts. I am a civil engineer come west to seek my fortune. My name is Caleb Warner. I live in Golden and I was recommended to Hermanos creek for trout fishing.

She had a trick of looking through long lashes that was a bit unfair, Caleb thought. But they did not hide a twinkle that lurked behind them.

"Did you catch any trout, Mr. Warner?" she asked. He showed her his basket.

"We have trout in New England," he said. "I was hoping to do better later in the afternoon. Did you say you were from the South?"

"I am a Californian." He was certain that she knew he had hoped she would give him her name in return. "The best fishing is in the canyon back of the waterfall at the head of our valley," she said. "You can easily climb the cliff."

"You own it? The valley?" She opened her eyes a bit in acknowledgment of his persistence and speed to take the opening.

"My father does. His name is Clinton." She had evaded it cleverly. Miss Clinton. That was as far as she would go. Caleb bowed to his defeat.

"Well, then, Miss Clinton, do you think your father would have any objection to my fishing through his meadows, later, after I have been above the fall?"

"I am quite sure he would not. Perhaps you would like to meet him? The house is not very far from here." Caleb laughed and she with him.

"I should be delighted," he said. "And I am very glad to have met you Miss Clinton." She took his hand and shook it as a boy might have shaken it. More strongly, with fingers that were firm and cool. There was nothing of coquetry about her. Her suggestion that Caleb meet her father held, he felt, no hint of flirtation. It showed that she liked him, a little, sufficiently to dispense a measure of hospitality that he had come to recognize as a western attribute.

"The house is there," she said, pointing. "Back of those eucalypts. Father planted them for a windbreak."

The girl had left the pinto pony standing with its reins hanging straight from bit to soil, an effective haltering. Now she placed them about its neck, their buckle back of the saddle-horn and, as she and Caleb walked along the stream toward the house the pony followed as closely and sedately as the wolfhounds.

> Evidently Miss Clinton is what we Americans call "a nice girl," with individual attractions. Does the Yankee measure up?

Undersea Craft Idea Dates Back Centuries

Few and evil have been the days of the submarine, which it is hoped to banish from the fleets of the world. But experimentally the idea goes back into a very remote past. Aristotle speaks of some kind of submarine vessel used in the siege of Tyre more than 2,000 years ago, and there are occasional mentions of the idea through history.

In the Sixteenth century we come to the bishop of Upsala's claim to have invented a boat for scuttling ships from below, and in 1626 Charles I gave a Dutch inventor an order for "boates to go under water," though they do not seem to have been used against the French. There were the rudimentary and unsuccessful "turtles" of Bushnell in the Eighteenth century. But an ill fate pursued the early inventors.

Fulton's submarine was rejected by France, England and America in turn, and he set himself to the more usual work of designing boat engines. Johnson's submersible, which was to have rescued Napoleon from St. Helena, came to nothing. Bauer, who was taken up by the prince consort, drowned the crew of his submarine, though the admiralty seems to have been largely to blame.—Manchester Guardian.

Origin of Hat Unknown

It is difficult to state just when hats were first worn, and there is no record as to where or when the first hat was made. The first modern hat, as we know this article of men's wear, was made in Paris in 1404 by a Swiss manufacturer, but it was not until 49 years thereafter that the French adopted any sort of a head covering.

Churches in Business

An old Jewish synagogue in Maiden lane, London, is now used as a theater for rehearsals, and a Methodist chapel in Southwark, where Wesley preached, is used as a paper warehouse.

The famous Surrey chapel, where Rowland Hill preached, is today the great boxing rendezvous known as the Ring. At Willesden an old chapel has been converted into a draper's establishment, the pulpit being used as the cash desk; another, in the Hampstead road, has been turned into a picture palace.

The Union Jack club, opposite Waterloo station, stands on the site of a Methodist chapel which had lost its worshipers, while St. Andrew's, Tavistock place, was once a fashionable church, but has been in turn a cycle store and a club.—London Answers.

Howe About—

(Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

Ever since learning to read, I have regularly encountered the name of Charles Lamb. I do not like anything he has written, or any incident in his history; probably my dislike of the man is a result of seeing him exploited so much. . . . I do not recall hearing anyone mention Charles Lamb in conversation; newspaper writers usually let him alone, but the magazines are forever exhibiting him. Boston is as famous for Charles Lamb as it is for baked beans; both bad dishes.

Probably you have observed that you tire of the gossip of your town. Where I live we have gossip five and ten years old, and I have become so tired of it that I almost scream when the subject comes up. Probably women are more interested in it than men, and better satisfied with its trifling details. I was lately sitting on a porch with four women, and their prattle was more tiresome than silence would have been.

Why are there so many impudent, idle, dishonest, worthless, disturbing people? Because they get away with it so easily. . . . You make a mistake if you do not promptly "call down" the dead beat, the loafer, the liar, the impolite, the dishonest. To firmly rebuke all such is the most effective way an honest private citizen has of preaching.

There is a new trouble in the world: Complaint is made that there are more educated people than can be supported. The preliminary wail comes from Bulgaria, and no doubt will spread.

In a great majority of cases the desire to be educated is a desire to escape work. The educated wish to be professors, politicians, preachers, lawyers, doctors, entertainers, and exploit the workers.

In Bulgaria there is such a rush for education that too few are left to cultivate the fields and work in factories. The plain people are complaining and may revolt.

There are lately almost as many patent practitioners as there are patent medicines. Every school, every college, is turning out some kind of new professor to collect another unnecessary tax, and further unnecessarily burden real workers. There is a gent in nearly every public school teaching athletics, learned as a part of his education. Another gent or madam teaches music, which becomes jazz rendered on mandolins and saxophones.

A good many in this country are also of the opinion that there is too much education; if a Bulgarian rebel will come to this country with his doctrine, he will gain quite a following.

George Bernard Shaw once wrote: "If you only knew all the things I think and dare not say!" . . . Friederich Neitzsche dared write them. This man thought nothing he didn't write, and whatever he wrote was cast in as mean and vicious form as his terribly clever brain could suggest. Angry and drunken men are said to speak the truth. Neitzsche spoke the truth when as good-natured and sober as he ever became. Anyone may read him and find out what is behind the veneer of civilization. And this terrible old savage was educated. He lived all his life in the university atmosphere; none of the professors had more learning, and none knew as much about human nature. With it all he had ability to write so clearly, forcefully and wittily that his enemies could not peacefully laugh at him, as so many writers are treated; they rushed for their ink horns and goose quills, and smote him so lustily that he became one of the most famous of men.

It is not surprising that a woman hates the men. From the time she is a little girl, the subject is discussed before her; not only by women, but men themselves are always issuing warnings against each other. Likewise she hears nothing but compliments for women; how they are imposed on by men; how they are patient, and have ideals the men never fulfill; how men eat like pigs, smoke too much, run around too much, sleep too late, idle too much, and are stingy with their money. . . . The wonder is that a girl, after reaching seventeen or eighteen, will associate with men. . . . If she ever learns that women, too, have faults, she must learn it for herself; from the meanness of other women—the men never say anything about it.

A man I know was made a fool of in a courthouse, and greatly wronged. He was sued for damages, on flimsy pretext, and a lawyer who was to get half in case of recovery, was very unfair and insulting in examining the defendant, boldly making charges against him not in the evidence.

The suit was thrown out of court and now the defendant says he will sue the offending lawyer for damages. I think such an action might hold, as the lawyer acted outrageously.

I even believe some judges might be impeached for actions on the bench. Many judges become old grandmothers, almost believe they own the courthouse, and act in outrageous fashion.

Ramsdell's glasses which were found quite a distance from the accident were unbroken.

Michigan's Fur Possibilities

Ever since the days of Father Pere Marquette and Cavalier de LaSalle Michigan has been noted for its fur producing animals which seem perfectly native to her bog lands and swamps. In colonial days trappers and courier-de-bois waxed wonderfully opulant catching the fur denizens of the forest for their pelts and trading at Detroit or some eastern town.

The ancient Pottawattomie Indians were experts at luring the mink otter, muskrat, skunk, fox, beaver wolverine, and various other animals into snares cunningly devised and even to-day after the lapse of two hundred years, the swamps and bogs offer rare possibilities to the farmer lad who likes to pick up a few stray dollars for incidentals during the winter, and often the poultryman finds the ravages of mink or skunk among his fledglings overnight.

But as a rule, the most of these warm blooded killers are becoming extinct, a fact that bulls up the price of Madam's seal fur coat quite noticeably. Science has demonstrated that foxes and muskrats will live in captivity—at least a lot of farms are now established in the state, keeping thousands of skunks silver foxes and muskrats. Near Jackson a fox farm is in full blast, and there are others, and local citizens are share-holders in the enterprise. Over at Mt. Forest, Michigan, near Bay City, may be found a large acreage devoted to the rearing of muskrats, which it is claimed, do well entirely away from water. Their valuable skins form a considerable article of commerce here, The plan pursued by Mt. Forrest farms is to sell a prime pair of rats to the investor at a stipulated price, then half of the increase for three years, goes to the owner. At the end of that time the entire issue of the investment is converted into pelts and disposed of also on the 50-50 basis, after which the investor is out, but can begin over again by buying as many pairs as he desires.

There are many products from the rat other than pelt. The carcass forms a delicious meat on the tables of our fashionable clubs and hotels; the musk sack forms a valuable adjunct in the manufacture of perfumes; the pelt seldom sells for less than $1.00 to $1.30, and it is true as they say of Chicago packing houses, nothing but the squeal is lost.

There is a constantly growing demand for these pelts, as the wild rats are becoming alarmingly rare in localities where water holes used to abound, but are now practically dry from modern and excessive drainage. The farm yokel used to realize more from his peltry than he did from his hog crop, whereas the "hooch" crop at present is far more lucrative than either.

The estimated progeny of a healthy pair of musk rats in one year is estimated at three litters, averaging nine each or 27, and the growth is very rapid. They are domesticated to a certain extent and immune from diseases that certain other captives have, and much more so than those in the wild state. In addition, these domesticated rats are pedigreed and bred from the largest and best species indigenous to Northern Michigan. The proprietors of the farm are very optimistic as to the outcome and are promising big dividends to investors, on a comparatively small first payment. It figures out on paper in big numbers, but we should like to see the genuine, honest-to-goodness schedule and account honestly kept for three years, showing actual gains.

Such an aggregation of "Lizzies" and "Chevies" and "Boats" of all kinds as never before will snort three times and hie themselves toward the county seat. Red lemonade and cracker-jack will flow in great streams and all kids will be happy inspecting the "hipporhynosceros" and the "Ju-Ju Bird."

Both young people are well known in this community, having attended and graduated from the local high school. The bride is at present a teacher in the Fordsons school while the groom is a draftsman in the Ford Offices. Immediately after the wedding dinner served by Mildred Sprague, Lloyd and James Mc Laughlin, the bridal pair left for a trip to Niagara Falls. After which they will be in their new home at 6210 Ternes, Ave. Fordson, Detroit.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Iowa Shows Her Resentment Over Farm Neglect by Retiring Cummins.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NOT because of any especial liking for Smith Wildman Brookhart nor because of any especial animosity toward Senator Albert B. Cummins, but in order to express their resentment against the administration's attitude toward farm relief legislation. That is the generally accepted explanation of the action of the Iowa Republicans, who in the primary last week voted the veteran Cummins back to private life and named the radical Brookhart to succeed him. The fact that Mr. Cummins had broken with the administration so far as to support the measure demanded by the corn belt did not suffice to save him. The unofficial canvass of the vote gives Brookhart a plurality of about 70,000. Running third was Howard J. Clark, who may stand as an independent Republican candidate in November.

At the White House and among the closest friends of the President the defeat of Cummins was considered the result of a factional fight stirred up by the unseating of Brookhart and not a repudiation of the President on the question of farm legislation. Perhaps incidentally, Cummins is another pro-World-court senator to be refused re-nomination.

An analysis of the Iowa vote, compared with usual votes in that state, indicates that a lot of Democrats voted as Republicans for Brookhart, the supposition being that they believed he would be more easily defeated in November than would be Cummins. Most of the rest of the Democrats cast their ballots for Claude Porter, and the party leaders there and in Washington declare he will have an easy victory because, as they assert, many Republicans will vote for him, just as they did for Dan Steck, against Brookhart. That there will be enough defections from Brookhart to affect the result is denied by the Republican managers. However, even if Brookhart is elected, the G. O. P. may be considered virtually to have lost a seat in the senate, for he cannot be counted on in the matter of party regularity.

UNMOVED by the Iowa primary result, the administration is still flatly opposed to the corn belt price stabilization measure, and the prospects for farm relief legislation at this session of congress were decidedly faint last week. The farm bloc leaders submitted their surplus control plan to Secretary of the Treasury Mellon for an opinion of its soundness and hoped that if he looked on it with favor the President might be won over. But the corn belt senators and the cotton states senators could not get together, the Southerners saying they would not support the measure if the equalization fee were to be made applicable to cotton at once. They might fall into line if this application to cotton were deferred two years and made optional then, and if one-half of the proposed $150,000,000 revolving fund were allocated to the cotton market operations. This, the corn belt men said, was impossible.

Senator Fess of Ohio opposes the McNary-Haugen bill partly because it would, in his opinion, be favorable to British rather than to American interests. He said it would "sovietize the great agricultural industry" in America and assure Great Britain a cheap food supply, transferring that nation's unemployment problem to the United States.

FLORIDA'S primaries, according to unofficial figures, gave re-nomination to Senator Duncan U. Fletcher. More interesting was the apparent defeat of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, daughter of the Commoner, for the congressional nomination in the Fourth district, which includes Miami. Incomplete returns showed that Congressman William J. Sears had been renominated, but Mrs. Owen's managers charged irregularities in several counties and said a contest would be made if the returns did not show her the winner.

SENATOR REED'S campaign investigating committee is now at work and already has found that the Pennsylvania Republican primary expenditures were far up in six figures—perhaps as much as a million. Representative Vare and Governor Pinchot both were on hand for the opening of the hearing, and expenditures made on behalf of the latter's candidacy, listed at more than $160,000, were the first to get into the record, but toward the end of the session $500,000 was mentioned in connection with the Pepper campaign. Pinchot's campaign treasurer, P. S. Stahlnecker, said he had been told by Representative Morin, western Pennsylvania manager for Representative Vare, that an "under-cover man" the Vare forces had in the Pepper headquarters at Pittsburgh had informed him that the budget fixed by the senator's organization amounted to $500,000.

THOUGH the senate judiciary committee reported that the recent Presidential order authorizing the use of state and city peace officers as federal prohibition officers is valid and legal, Treasury department officials announced that there was no intention of invoking the power at this time. Indeed, they admitted that the plan had been practically abandoned. The majority report of the committee in effect held the order was valid but meaningless. Senators King and Caraway denied its legality.

The Republican steering committee refused to place on the senate program the Goff bill designed to strengthen the Volstead act, and so practically shelved it for this session. Senator Wadsworth of New York, chairman of the committee, announcing this action, issued a statement demanding repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. He defied the drys who are planning to defeat him next November, with F. W. Cristman, and declared he was wet to the core.

"While I advocate modification," he said, "I do not believe modification of the Volstead act within constitutional limits will solve the problem permanently. I think we must go back to the Eighteenth amendment itself and substitute for it a simple grant of power to congress. That done, I should hope that some system, such as the one now prevailing in Quebec, could be set up in this country."

Illinois drys, who are fighting Brennan's modification referendum plan, were decidedly pleased with Wadsworth's admission that modification would not solve the question.

MEMBERS of the League of Nations committee on the opium traffic were roused to anger in their meeting in Geneva by Arthur Woods, former police commissioner of New York, when he strongly denounced the committee for not recommending any action to curb the drug traffic. The committee, he declared, had ignored the only solution offered, which is government ownership or control of all factories handling derivatives of opium and coca leaves and the strictest control on the destination of all drugs shipped out with records kept of the names and addresses of the consignees.

Holland is the chief manufacturer of morphine, cocaine and heroin, so it was Herr Van Betton of that country who arose to say: "It is unjustifiable that Mr. Woods comes here for the first time and tries to force all his ideas into the report. I protest energetically against attaching such importance to his statements."

Chairman Bourgeois said he would try to get Mr. Woods to tone down his statement, but the New Yorker declared afterward he would not alter his report and the committee could take it or leave it.

WHEN the League of Nations council opened its sessions in Geneva it appeared that the quarrel over permanent seats was to be continued. The Brazilian member was absent, nominally ill, and Spain was represented only by an underling. Next day Senor Franco, the Brazilian, appeared, however, and announced that his government had decided to withdraw from the council. The Spanish representative's substitute gave notice that Spain would quit the council in September unless it were given a permanent seat. It is believed both will resign from the league. The council arranged a conference of World court members to consider the American reservations.

FRANCE'S cabinet has been engaged in desperate efforts to save the franc, whose value dropped Wednesday to about 33 to the dollar, and after a lot of talk about food rationing and other severe measures, it decided to lift all restrictions on the export of capital, giving freedom of movement to the national currency. The coupon system, calling for the name and address of owners of all stocks, bonds, and other securities to insure taxation, was abandoned. French business will revert to the ordinary bearer paper, which does not disclose the identity of the owner. Further employment of the country's gold reserve to sustain the franc was also abandoned, the government deciding to hoard bullion as a guarantee of credits and the eventual creation of a new currency. In adopting this plan the cabinet yielded to the opinion of expert bankers and conciliated the Bank of France. It was certain that a fight in the parliament would result, for the Socialists, radicals and communists consider the coupon system their pet scheme for insuring the taxation of the rich.

CHICAGO is making elaborate preparations to take care of the international Eucharistic congress the week of June 20 and Roman Catholics by the thousands are on their way there from all parts of the world. Every steamship from Europe brings numbers of eminent churchmen and prominent laymen who will take part in the impressive ceremonies in Chicago and in Mundelein, a suburb built by the Catholic church. Chief of the princes of the church there will be Cardinal Bonzano, sent by the pope as his legate. It is expected the congress will attract more than a million visitors to Chicago.

DISPATCHES from Tangier tell of the appearance of a new leader of revolt against Spain and France to take the place of the fallen Abd-el-Krim. He is Ouldfar, a brigand chief of the Djeballas, and already his men have captured Chechaouen, the sacred city of northern Morocco, and massacred its Riffian garrison. Though the Djeballa tribes are making war on the Riffs, they also hope to drive out the French and Spanish.

SECRETARY MELLON announced that, owing to the volume of revenues coming in to the treasury, the usual June financing in the form of issuing treasury securities would not be necessary. He said there had been increases in most items of receipts, especially in income taxes, and the treasury thereby was enabled to do away with a quarterly fiscal operation for the first time in more than eight years. The treasury will be able to go through to the middle of September without issuing new securities. There were indications at the treasury that the surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30 will approach $275,000,000, or about $20,000,000 greater than last year.

Pacific's Bed Quivers Near Acapulco, Mexico

Washington.—Again the bottom of the Pacific ocean south of Mexico has shaken itself, this time in the earthquake which occurred at 2:17 p. m., eastern standard time, on Saturday, June 5. The epicenter, or point of greatest disturbance of the quake, was said to have been at approximately 8 degrees north latitude and 103 degrees west longitude. Lansing—The Michigan Education association is working out plans for selection and distribution of reading circle books for schools of the state this fall and winter. At a recent meeting of the executive committee action was taken to bring about the service. Distribution of the books will be handled through a special reading circle board which will maintain an approval list of books, from which each school may make its selection.

Northville—Miss Avis M. Brown, daughter of E. E. Brown, editor and publisher of the Northville Record, will act as valedictorian of the class of 1926 of the Northville high school at its graduation exercises. She has the highest average attained thus far by any graduate of the school, her standing for the school year being 97.52. Miss Brown is editor-in-chief of the school's annual paper, the Palladium, and the accompanist for the glee club.

Ann Arbor—Jazz music has failed to justify its existence in the opinion of Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan, who delivered the principal address at the thirty-first annual commencement of the University School of Music. Dr. Little declared that modern music, like modern painting, "lacks beauty" and owes its origin to the efforts of producers seeking to satisfy a pleasure-mad and novelty-hungry public.

Grand Rapids—Increased competition among Grand Rapids milk dealers has forced the price down to the point that some of the smaller dealers' are offering raw milk at eight cents a quart. It is said that there were never so many dealers in Grand Rapids as at the present time. A plentiful supply of milk, a good demand for the product and the competition has so upset the market that the retail prices range from 12 cents per quart to the new low figure.

Lansing—Failure of several bus companies to enforce compliance with speed laws for motor vehicles may result in license revocations, Sherman T. Handy, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission states. Letters advising operators of the 30-mile per hour limit were mailed to all companies some time ago. Since then, flagrant violations and disregard of the warning which have often resulted in serious accidents, have been reported to the commission.

Lansing—Possibility that unforseen difficulties may arise in state highway plans is seen in an injunction granted by the Michigan Supreme Court to Charles A. Hendershott of Jackson county, to enjoin the state highway commissioner from completing work on land condemned for highway purposes. Hendershott sought an injunction under the contention that land can be condemned only for highway purposes by a jury of freeholders, and then only in the case of necessity.

Ypsilanti—Construction work on the railroad which is to connect the main line of the Michigan Central with the proposed new Ford textile plant three miles southeast of here, is expected to begin at once. The Ford Motor Co recently advertised for men to work on the railroad. It is proposed to erect a $3,000,000 plant near here for the weaving of upholstery cloth for enclosed cars. It is to be operated by power furnished by a hydro-electric plant on the Huron River south of Ypsilanti.

Clare—The State Association of Farm Mutual Insurance companies held a two day session here, June 9 and 10. It was largely attended by delegates representing the companies in every section of the state, insuring 433,000 farms carrying $1,000,300,000 insurance. The attendance was larger than any previous meeting of the association. Efforts, extending over a period of nine years, to adopt a standard form policy, were successful after a full afternoon session by a 70 per cent vote of delegates present.

Jackson—Veterans of Foreign wars in convention here, adopted resolutions opposing any changes in the present immigration law and asking that Armistice day, November 11, be made a state holiday, that exemptions of general taxes now enjoyed by veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American wars be applicable to World War veterans, and that the national encampment change its by-laws to permit taking into active V. F. W. membership any veteran who served honorably with any of the allies in the World War.

Flint—Flint's summer tax rate for 1926 will be $19.50 for each $1,000 of assessed valuation. The rate is based on a valuation of $161,285,602. This is an increase of $1.50 over the 1925 summer rate.

Jackson—Grand Army of the Republic veterans and 10 other patriotic organizations, will meet in Benton Harbor for next year's conventions it was decided by delegates to the forty-eighth G. A. R. Encampment here.

Iron Mountain—J. Joseph Herbert, department commander of the American Legion in Michigan, states that preparations are being made to hold the 1926 convention in Lansing. Herbert was recently quoted as having said the convention had not been given to any city.

Marshall—The Harper Dry Goods company of this city has filed articles of corporation. It is capitalized at $20,000 and is to do a general merchandise business and handle dry goods. The stockholders are Charles A. Harper, Marshall; William S. Bengo, Ann Arbor, and Stanley K. Loveland, Milan.

Cassopolis—Mrs. Josephine L. August, local telephone operator for the Dowagiac Telephone company, has been presented with the Theodore N. Vail silver medal and $250 in gold for her bravery in staying at her post over the bank while bandits terrified the town the night of November 24, 1925.

Grand Rapids—Petting parties are under the ban in city parks and playgrounds. Safety Director James Sinke, who asserts the cool weather this spring has not reduced public spooning, has requested that officers be assigned to several parks and playgrounds, from which neighborhoods many complaints have been received.

Port Huron—Detroit has been chosen as the site for the 1927 convention of Michigan postmasters, members of the National League of District Postmasters, decided in concluding their annual convention here. John P. Robertson, Metamora, and H. Barnum, Bailey, Mich., were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Sault Ste. Marie—Freight passing through St. Mary's Falls canal dropped 4,000,000 tons below the record made last year in May and April, the statistical report of lakes commerce shows. The total freight tonnage locking through here in May and April this year was 10,157,561 tons, compared with 14,800,000 last year. The drop this year is attributed to the late opening of the navigation season.

Algonac—The postoffice department at Washington has announced that it has accepted the proposal of the First National bank to lease new quarters on the northwest corner of Water and Pleasant streets, for 10 years from July 1 or date of occupancy. The lease for the new quarters is to include equipment, heat, light, water, safe, power for electric fans, parcel post and savings furniture when necessary.

Grand Rapids—Bean growers of Michigan are discouraged over the behavior of the market since last fall, it is reported here. They expected the high price of potatoes to result in an increased demand for their product, but bean prices have been far from satisfactory. It seems the consumers did not turn in great numbers from potatoes to beans. Prosperity was general and people continued to eat potatoes regardless of the price.

Grand Rapids—Principal witness against the three officers of Hyney, Emerson and Company, former Chicago investment concern which failed last October, who have been indicted here on charges of using the mails to defraud, will be officials of six western Michigan banks, according to District Attorney Edward J. Bowman. These bankers will be from Bangor, Greenville, Ionia, Muskegon and Muskegon Heights, it was stated.

Lansing—Ten Michigan State college students arrested here May 24 for disturbing the peace and given 10 days to pay their fines, may be brought into court and given prison sentences, it was intimated here when it became known that the boys had failed to pay the fines as ordered by Municipal Judge John McClellan. The youths were arrested following the celebration in connection with the baseball victory over the University of Michigan.

Ypsilanti—Ground will be broken late this summer for the new $250,000 library building at the State Normal College here. It will be located west of the present main building, the oldest structure on the campus, a portion of which must be razed to make room for the new structure. The new library is to be completed by September 1, 1927, and will be dedicated the following month in connection with the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the college.

Mt. Clemens—The county road commissioners will open bids June 17 for ridding Gratiot avenue right of way of all trees that obstruct the view of motorists trying to make a safe crossing of the D. U. R. car tracks. By authority of the state highway department the road commission has been empowered to advertise for bids to do this work, deemed necessary for public safety, as six lives have been lost recently because of automobiles being hit by electric cars. Bids call for the cutting of all trees and removal of all stumps.

Ann Arbor—Invitations to more than 1,500 physicians throughout the state, have been mailed to the special course for practitioners to be given at the University of Michigan summer school. The courses, which will begin June 21, are open to a limited number of graduated medical men. The six weeks' term of the summer session has been divided into two parts. General medicine and special courses in metabolism and cardiology will be given for the first period; and surgery, urological diagnosis and treatment of fracture, the second.

Ninety Pounds Pasture Daily Is Cow's Limit

A cow giving an average of 35 pounds of milk a day would have to consume 175 pounds of good pasture every day to maintain her yield and keep in good condition, according to Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Since few cows can eat more than 90 pounds of grass in one day even from the most luxuriant growth, a big portion of the 35 pounds of milk she gives comes right off her back unless the pasture is supplemented with a grain ration

"All grass, regardless of condition or location, is well over one half water," states the Institute. "In ordinary field grasses this percentage runs from 53 to 77. Sweet clover is 75 per cent water. Alfalfa ranges from 70 to 80 percent water From any pasture a cow gets not more than 2 to 5 percent protein and a fraction of 1 percent of fat; and of all the grasses she eats, only 15 to 30 percent is made up of the very necessary carbohydrates. Because grass does not contain enough of the feeding elements a cow needs in proportion to its bulk, the cow cannot keep on producing to the limit of her capacity on pasture alone. Supplementing the grass with a grain ration, however keeps from using up her bodily reserve. It gives her the balanced ration she needs to keep on producing milk in profit making quantities. It keeps her in condition and brings her into the fall in shape to produce the most milk during the winter months when milk prices are highest."

At What Speed!

What speed constitutes safety in driving. Here in Michigan we have proscribed 35 miles on country road 15 miles in residential districts which is in turn cut 10 miles in business sections, all of which may be either excessive or slow when confronted with traffic conditions. Traffic regulation is still largely a matter of hypocrisy, even traffic officials, unless irritated, permitting and often insisting on higher speeds when occasion demands. New York has just adopted a law allowing 40 miles on express boulevards, while Rhode Island demands that motorists travel at a 35 mile gait on the highways or get out of the way of those who would. The only rational rule is that the motorist should drive at a safe rate. That may be one mile an hour at a congested street crossing and it may be forty miles or, even more out along the country highways. As automobile traffic grows we will insist more and more on eliminating the careless driver, rather than submitting the careful driver to foolish regulations. During the past two years automobile accidents have exacted a toll of forty two thousand lives in this country, a large part of which can be directly charged to carelessness on the part of fool drivers. The careless driver should be driven from the highways—he is too great a menace to be longer tolerated.

From there on in, there is nothing but a path through the forest so our baggage all had to be made into a load for carriers and our precious Harley left behind until we move on in where the new station is to be which will be about May 1st. The Whittier's accompanied us. Mrs. Whittier and I traveled in bush chairs and the boys rode their bicycles while our baggage and camping equipment was carried by about fifty men. They were hard days because we were not used to that mode of traveling. The hills are steep and numerous so we had to walk over half of the way under a sun that burns like fire. We crossed the rivers in various ways, on makeshift bridges, poles, on the boy's backs and in one place four boys carried us in chairs. We always had a crowd of natives following us just to look and to marvel at the ways of white folks. Some of the women jumped and laughed in simple glee and others crouched back into the bushes or their huts in utter horror at the sight of skin as white as ours. Everywhere we were beseeched for medicine and generally words can't express the awfulness of disease in this land. We camped at night in government rest houses whenever possible and in native houses when it wasn't.

It was like a haven of rest after traveling for six days among sights so strange to the eyes of a new missionary to climb up and see on this hill top a bit of Christian civilization for even though the buildings here are all temporary bark ones, the clearing is really very pretty for just enough palm and fruit trees have been left for beauty and comfort. For the present we are residing here at Ebole Bengan which is a communion point at one end of this vast field, but as soon as land can be procured more nearly in the center of the district, we will move on in and begin the long process of establishing a new station. There are now 122 evangelistic points with a school at each place among four tribes so you can have some idea of the task that will be Mr. Harris' when he gets the language or languages, for they speak several, to be able to be the itinerating evangelist.

Rev. and Mrs. Beanland and baby Junior have been living here since Sept. and recently Dr. and Mrs. Lehman have come up to be with them. The Beanlands go to Yaounde station the first of May and that will leave the four of us to man the new station. The Lehmans are ideal missionaries who have spent twenty eight years out here so we shall profit by their advice which comes out of wonderful years of experience. The doctor is a fine physician and surgeon, but above all he is deeply evangelistic in spirit and Mrs. Lehman is adear quiet soul with a winning way, who not only manages the dispensary skillfully but also does much soul winning for Christ. We are fortunate to have them with us in these months of beginning.

There is just one house here so we all live together. The walls are bark, the roof palm leaf thatch and the floor bamboo. The furniture is made from grocery boxes or rough boards with a few pieces of reed which have been carried on the heads of natives from Metet, but you would be surprised to see how really attractive it is. We have two bed rooms, dining room, living room and study with a kitchen at the back which has an inprovised stove and a dutch oven outside where the cook bakes real white man's bread, cookies and the like. Across the street is the dispensary and school for evangelists; a little farther down the hill is the building which serves as a boy's school in the morning; a more advanced school in the afternoon and the church on Sunday. It isn't elegant. Has a dirt floor with posts driven in the ground upon which are laid rough boards for seats. The pulpit is of the same material. The walls will be bark when they are finished. Up the hill on the other side are the houses for the native evangelists and other help.

And the people with poor, naked and in many case itch covered bodies, crowd around and gaze for hours anxious to see what the missionaries are doing and especially are they interested in us because we are new. They like to shake hands and make us feel welcome. How one longs to be able to talk to them. We have started on our language study and we hope it won't be many months until we can talk some at least. Their faces tell the story of the hard life they have led and one's heart is filled with compassion. The need is very depressing. Words cannot express the awful conditions under which they live and I pray that somehow I may learn to know and help. Sleeping sickness is perhaps the worst scourge, although physically they have almost everything in the way of disease; materially they have almost nothing, but spiritually they have great possibilities and so we press on.

It's time for me to close now and I have not told you of the little, itch covered orphan boy who is sitting on my door step, whose winning smile and dark eyes are pleading for a chance or of the little naked orphan girl who is in the first stages of sleeping sickness who stands outside and some way must be found to help or of the many other cases of which I might tell you. I shall try to write more of what is being accomplished next time.

Will you not join us in daily prayer for this new work?

Sincerly yours,
Eva Hutchins Harris.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

Elizabeth Chandler to Hannah Townsend

Logan Township, Michigan, 1830

I sat at the side of the vessel, gazing on the scenery that was passing before me, with my thoughts divided between the land I had left and that which was in view, now reverting to the past, and now dwelling on the untried future; and often, very often, resting with the gathered band at Cherry Street (The Ladies' Anti Slave Society of Philadelphia) amongst those whom I supposed thee then to be. As we approached Detroit, our Governor's mansion on the bank of the river, was pointed out to us. It is merely a log building whitewashed; but the grounds about it have quite the appearance of a gentleman's residence. Detroit is rather a dirty place; here we remained, however only one night, and set off early the next morning for Tecumseh.

After proceeding a short distance, the stage suddenly stopped and the passengers began, very orderly, to make preparations for leaving it. For what cause this was done, I was at a loss to determine, as besides that it was much too early for breakfast, there was no appearance of a house anywhere in the vicinity. However, we quietly imitated the example of our fellow travelers, and descended to terra firma, when it appeared the measure was one of prudence, required by our approach to a long series of worn, loose and uneven logs, denominated a bridge! and stretching across a stream dignified by the appellation of the river "Rouge!" A real back woods bridge this! thought I—and, as I walked over it, I perfectly acquiesced in the wisdom of dismounting.

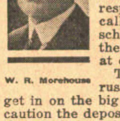
MOREHOUSE GIVES PLAN TO PROTEC PEOPLE FROM WILD-CAT PROMOTERS

American Bankers Association Official Who Has Exposed Fraudulent Schemes for Robbing Savers Draws Up Set of Rules to Foil Crooks.

By W. R. MOREHOUSE,
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association.

ARTICLE NO. IV



W. R. Morehouse

THE solution to the great problem of protecting savings depositors from losing their money in fraudulent schemes is largely in the hands of our bankers. If they will co-operate with those who save they can make it hard for these plunderers to continue business. Hasten the day when our bankers without exception will gladly welcome interviews with depositors who contemplate making investments, will urge an investigation or recommend in the stead of little-known securities investments of unquestioned responsibility. In every case where customers call at the bank excited and nervous over some scheme where by investing a few hundred dollars they expect to make thousands any banker will at once sense the situation.

The banker knows that the depositor is being rushed off his feet, with "Hurry, hurry and get in on the big clean-up!" and it remains for the banker to caution the depositor against such tactics. In order to prevent this all that our bankers have to do is to suggest that their customers make it a rule always to bring high-pressure salesmen to the bank to be interrogated regarding their promotions. This will break up sales nine times out of ten, for high-pressure salesmen invariably avoid being questioned too closely by bankers who know investments.

Rules to Follow

Our bankers should urge this investment slogan: "Investigate before you invest. Consult your banker first," and so indelibly impress it on the minds of their depositors that they will always be guided by their banker's advice in making investments. Salient points which should be kept before the investing depositor are:

(1) There are three cardinal points to all good investments, namely safety of principal, certainty of income and salability.

(2) Safety of principal is more important than a high yield; the promise of big returns is usually a sign of a risky speculation.

(3) It is like taking a leap in the dark to invest in promotions which are an unknown quantity and for this reason a thorough investigation should always be made.

(4) It is morally wrong, if not criminally so, for any person to invest in any proposition he feels is a skin-game, or which is tainted by trickery or fraud or opens the way for a favored few to "get in on the ground floor," clean up and get out from under before the scheme collapses. Usually the depositor finds he is not in on the ground floor, there is no chance for him to clean up before the scheme collapses and so he loses all that he has invested.

(5) If a promotion is as good as claimed, it would not be necessary for high-pressure salesmen to resort to all sorts of questionable methods, it would not be necessary to rush a victim off his feet and sign him up before he could interview his banker, but he could be given time to consult others before investing.

(6) The only reason high-pressure pirates go to those who are inexperienced in finance for funds is because they can palm off on them so-called investments which in the eyes of men of experience are valueless.

(7) The glib-talking promoter is not a true friend of the savings depositor but is a wolf in sheep's clothing, he will resort to any kind of trickery to exchange a certificate of stock for the depositor's cash, his glittering promises are fictitious and he is planning how he can entrap his victims and relieve them of their savings and not how he can make good dividends for them.

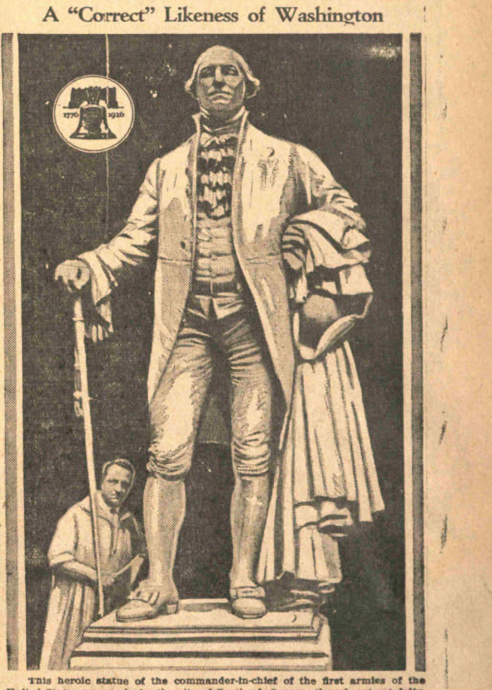
(8) For every oil well that pays dividends there are many dry holes and abandoned drilling rigs, and for every profitable mine there are many abandoned shafts, and for every successful promotion there are a thousand failures, and because of these facts the savings depositor's chance of winning is too small to justify the great risk involved

(9) Savers should steer clear of stock, shares or units in world-revolutionizing inventions which are peddled in front of empty stores or sold from house to house or through the mails.

(10) Every novice investor should remember that, as in all lines of business, black sheep have invaded the investment field. They must be shunned, while investment firms and salesmen of responsibility and integrity should be supported.

Let our banks unite in a movement designed to protect the depositor against the schemes of the wild-cat promoter—in a movement that will save our savings depositors from despair and from poverty as a result of having lost all—in a movement that will turn into legitimate investment channels the millions of dollars which are now wasted on fraudulent schemes of one kind or another. The best service a bank can render a novice investor is to keep him from making poor investments by helping him to make good ones.

A "Correct" Likeness of Washington



This heroic statue of the commander-in-chief of the first armies of the United States was made for the city of Portland, Oregon, though not yet delivered there by the artist. The western municipality has loaned it to the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, opening in Philadelphia June 1 and continuing until December 1, to celebrate 150 years of American Independence. At the foot of the sculpture is shown Pompeo Coppini, the sculptor. Dr. Henry Waldo Poe, of Portland, declares the face to be the most correct likeness of Washington ever modeled.

A Preacher Talks Aloud

I am perfectly convinced that many people of the finest character find both enjoyment and relaxation in dancing, and that they are morally and spiritually none the worse for their reasonable participation in dancing under wholesome conditions. These people see to it that they dance only where the conditions are right, and they refuse to run any risk at any time. They keep dancing where it belongs, a means to an end; the end being social fellowship with intimates and physical relaxation. These people are strong in self control, actuated by the highest idealism in character building, and constantly seek to live their lives on the very highest plane. I would emphasize the fact that they form a comparatively small group.

I am equally convinced that dancing, as it now is carried on in our public schools and commercialized dance halls, is one of the great aids in sending multitudes of our young people to the devil. We are living in an age in which a thousand agencies combine to stimulate the baser passions of human nature. Books, pictures, movies, songs, vaudeville performances, dances, accounts of high society doings and divorces, to name but part of them, make it impossible for any but a favored few of our young people to reach maturity without being sophisticated in an unusual degree. High school dancing parties frequently lead to tragic consequences because these highly stimulated young people possess small self-control. Many of them receive no religious training whatever from home, school, or church. They are not so much immoral as non moral. The high school dance taken as a whole, is an unmitigated curse and a prolific source of evil. Of course, there are exceptions, but they are very rare indeed.

Difficult as the task may be for the Church to hold young folk unless it consents to tolerate dancing on its premises, I feel that the church cannot for a single moment cease to put other attractions in the place of the dance. I know of many churches where, under the specious plea that dancing would help keep the young folk tied up to its services and be the means of drawing others thereto, those in charge have put on dancing parties only to find that the results did not work out that way at all. Because of what dancing so often leads to I feel we cannot tolerate it at all. Experienced Y. M. C. A. men have told me that they have run social gatherings and camps for years without scarcely ever resorting to dances as a means of drawing the crowd. And that these were successful is beyond doubt. Of course, these men put time and thought into making their programmes of games and stunts. Some of them had little less than positive genius in program making.

Commercialized amusement is America's greatest problem so far as our social life is concerned. It is readily granted that what we most need is not so much loud mouthed condemnation of existing conditions as a constructive program that will lead to better things We get nowhere unless we put a better thing in the place of the thing we condemn. It is tragic but true that thousands of young Americans are going to be lost to Christ and goodness before we can supply the churches and schools of Michigan with men of vision and ability and buildings in which some sort of communal play life can be carried on under wholesome direction Even pillars of the church are not always men and women who think more of children than they do of the paint and varnish, and who are willing to replace a carpet worn by young people playing on church premises rather than have the youngsters, with no place to go, fall victims to the lure of the questionable and harmful. "Faith without work is dead." And nowhere is that more true than in the realm of caring for young people during their critical and restless years of development.

I think we have suffered from certain teaching that has been all too common in the past; I mean teaching to the effect that the moment one engages in certain forms of recreation or amusement, their religion is absolutely bound to come to an end. Many young people have been made reckless by that sort of thing from the mouths of the unthinking and unsympathetic. We ought rather to stress the fact that it is not so much the form of the recreation that is bad and harmful, as it is the way in which we allow it to rule us, and in the spirit in which we engage in it. Cards, billiards, pool, are intrinsically as harmless as tiddle-de-winks or golf. People can waste time and gamble on any game or sport. We get farther with our young folks which we stress the need of using all games reasonably. Wholesome attitudes are not inspired by whole sale condemnation of all games and recreations. From what I have seen in my own ministry during twenty years I am convinced that great harm resulted from people insisting that one could not possibly keep their fellowship with Christ it they played cards, or pool billiards. These games are all good ones and serve a fine purpose if they are used properly and not abused. We need to teach people how to use not one game, but all games and all forms of amusement.

The Ford Aeroplanes which constantly pass our town are a source of much amusement to the younger generation, in fact there is much speculation as to how high they travel. On Tuesday morning the plane was noticed traveling so high as to go behind the fleecy white clouds. Few of us thirty five years ago ever expected to see such sights. The day is fast approaching when regular passenger service will be inaugurated between Detroit and Chicago, New York and San Francisco. The only drawback that we know of is the extreme danger of engine stoppage and consequent nose diving. Planes will be built with two or three reserve engines undoubtedly and if one engine should go wrong the other will be tuned up and carry the machine. And there is no doubt but some genius will perfect a device which will automatically sustain the machine in mid-air under all circumstances.

Pulling Tests To Start With Ionia

The series of horse pulling contests which is to be held throughout Michigan this summer, under the auspices of the M. S. C., will open with the Ionia County Free Fair, at Ionia, on August 18 and 19, according to the itinerary announced here recently.

The Collins Dynamometer, a machine which records exactly the "pull" of any team hitched to it will be used in the contests. This is the same outfit which was used in similar tests held throughout the state last year.

The horse pulling contests develop into very exciting events, adding a lot of fun and interest to the fairs where they are held. The more serious purpose of education is said to be the real purpose of the contests, however.

"The principle of horse pulling contests of this kind," says Prof. H. J. Gallagher, of M. S. C. who is in charge of the dynamometer, "is not merely to furnish entertainment or see how much more one team can pull than another, but is rather to determine and emphasize the factors which enable the best pulling teams to win."

The complete itinerary of contests already booked for the lower peninsula follows: Ionia Free Fair Ionia, Aug. 18—19; Isabella County Fair, Mt. Pleasant, Aug. 25, 26 Caro Fair Association, Caro, Aug. 27; Northeastern Michigan Fair, Bay City, Aug. 31; Bad Axe Fair Bad Axe, Sept. 1—2; Wastenaw County Fair, Ann Arbor, Sept. 4; Sanilac County Fair, Sandusky, Sept. 8—9; Livingston County Fair Howell, Sept. 10; Jackson County Fair, Jackson Sept. 13—14; Saginaw, Sept. 16—17; Lenawee County Fair, Adrian, Sept. 21—22; North Branch Agricultural Society North Branch, Sept. 23—24; Eaton County Fair, Charlotte, Sept. 28; Grangers, Gleaners & Farmers Fair, Big Rapids, Sept. 30.

Many fairs and agricultural meetings in the Upper Peninsula will also be booked for showings of the dynamometer.

Doing His Bit

"But I washed my hands last month, I'm cleaning my teeth now" protested seven year old John to Teacher, "Teeth are my chore this month."

"Yes, teeth are your chore,", responded Teacher, only you are supposed to keep right on washing your hands too, this month and next month and the month after that. A real Junior Crusader learns in one month to do one chore and keeps on doing through all the other months."

"Gee, I didn't know that. It's a awful big job washing hands every day and every meal too." John breathed a long sigh, "But I got-to do it, I'm going to be a real Crusader." And like the little Knight that he was. John trudged off to wash his hands.

Doing as John does are thousands of other little folks in Michigan, juniors in the great Health Crusade.

The Modern Health Crusade, fostered by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and if affiliated branches, is teaching to John's older brother and sister health habits too, and more of them. To John and the other Junior Crusaders it has attempted to teach only a few of the habits most vital to winning and keeping health. These habits it teaches one at a time, and when one is learned, another is taught. But little folk are little folk, and sometimes that at first that when a new chore if learned the old one may be forgotten. However, they soon develop a pride in remembering all of the chores. and without knowing form the habits that will be the foundation for the health of later years.

THE CLINTONS

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father.

CHAPTER II

El Nido and Padilla

The Rancho El Nido, which means The Nest, was well named. Behind the lee of the tall eucalypts, planted in two rows at right angles, nestled the building of the ranch-house, built in old Californian fashion of adobe brick, red tiled, in the shape of a hollow square inclosing a patio-garden. It was on a rising ground above the stream that ran between trees heavily mantled with wild grapevines. About the house, and its barns and sheds and corrals, grew orchard trees, peach and apricot, almond, cherry, walnut. There were some orange and lemon trees and a few figs. There was a vineyard and the patio was a riot of flowers. A spring bubbled up in the exact center of the court and had been confined within a stone basin with one outlet out of which the overflow rippled and ran under an archway in the foundation of the house.

The place was above all a home, long-settled, deep-rooted, if a nest, built on the ground, as some nests are, may be fancied to have taken root. The place was well styled El Nido.

Back to it, in the twilight, at the urgent suggestion of the girl's father, a suggestion that was half command, holding such spontaneous invitation that it could not be refused without a touch of churlishness, came Caleb, returning from the stream above the waterfall, packing a well-filled creel.

The girl rose from an outer porch as he came up from the stream and met him at the steps. She was transformed. A soft gown of white had wrought magic and she received the homage of Caleb's surprised and frankly admiring gaze demurely. He opened the lid of the creel for her inspection.

"You know how to cast a fly in Massachusetts," she said. "They are beauties. We shall have them for supper. Wang!"

A fat and genial Chinaman, immaculate in white, appeared at the far end of the gallery, came forward and took the fish with a chuckle of approval.

"Suppeh leady twenty minnit, Miss Betty," he said as he waddled off.

"Betty—Betty Clinton!" He had her name at last and thought it suited her.

"You'll want to wash up. Maria will show you to your room."

"My room?"

"You are to stay here tonight. Father would not hear of you going. There is no moon. It is three miles down the canyon to the station at Heyward. Seven by the road. And there are no trains that you could catch conveniently."

She led the way in and delivered him to Maria, fatter than Wang, ample of breast, triple of chin, Spanish of look and accent.

"Maria," said the girl, "is the actual ruler of El Nido. You must pass inspection by Maria to be welcome here. You have fifteen minutes. We shall be in the big room at the north end. You can come in through the patio."

It was altogether a little astounding, Caleb reflected, as he made what toilet he could. He had come to the valley unheralded, without mutual acquaintance, without introduction, and here he was, pressed as a guest, almost as a friend. In Massachusetts—he laughed at himself in the mirror as he fussed with his tie. This was California, a country to itself, with very pleasant customs. And he was aware that his welcome would be as his behavior. But it was all very pleasant, very Western.

The big room ran the full length of one side of the house. At either end a quarter was raised by two steps, arched off, one part a library and study, the walls covered with books, the other end more distinctly feminine with a piano, flowers, inviting chairs of wicker and good rugs, some pictures on the walls. The intermediate space was common ground, dining room and living room combined. The place was lit with oil lamps in wrought-iron brackets and with candles in branching holders for the table. The meal, with the rustling, bestarched Maria, in black gown and white apron, superintending Wang, who served as well as he had cooked, was perfection.

The girl presided over the main dishes. Her father, tall, erect, gray-haired, gray of close-clipped mustache and goatee, had one sleeve tucked in the side pocket of his coat.

"I shall put the formal interrogation, sir," he said to Caleb. "How do you find the West?"

"I find it eager. And I like it. We bustle in the East but our ways and means are settled."

"Eager? I like your term. And I am glad you like the West. We shall hope to see more of you."

"You have lived here long?" asked Caleb.

"My grandfather settled here in eighteen-forty. He was one of Fremont's cavalry legion. He helped to take California from Pico. He was on the shores of Monterey bay when the British landed from their frigates and found they were too late. My father was then ten years old. I was one when he went back to Virginia and fought in the War of the Secession. For the South. I beg your pardon, sir."

Caleb caught Betty Clinton smiling at him.

"Not at all, sir," he answered. "My own grandfather fought for the North. But that was two generations ago. Now I know," he added with an answering smile, "why you, Miss Clinton, called me 'Yank' with such unction."

"My grandfather used to say," said Clinton, "that he was always cautious when he fought the Yanks but that he downright feared them when it came to business. But you are right, sir. That is all past. I fought in the Spanish war side by side with many gallant gentlemen from New England. One of them was major in my company. If it had not been for him I might have lost more than this." He touched his empty sleeve.

"You held rank, sir?"

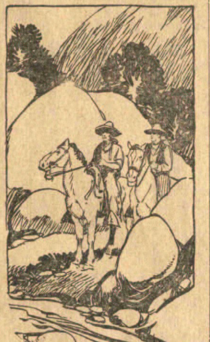
"I was a captain. It was a volunteer rank. I do not use it now. My sword is a plowshare. I have sufficient souvenir."

Caleb thought he detected a little bitterness in the reference to the missing limb.

Caleb noticed that Clinton refrained from any query as to his guest's status in the war. Nor did he mention it himself. He was tired of talking about it. The states were full of men who had done as much as he had.

"What are you going to do in California?" asked the girl. "The term civil engineer is a wide one. What does it mean to you? Bridges? Railroads?"

"It was predestined," said Caleb. He struck a match and showed her a seal at the end of his watch chain. On the green stone two parallel zigzags were graven.



The Trail Dipped Down Toward Water Level, Fording the Stream.

"The Zodiac sign of Aquarius, the Water Bearer. It is the eleventh sign and the sun enters it about the twenty-first of January, the day that I was born. So I am a water engineer, both by choice and by predestination."

She gave a little cry as she bent forward to look at the seal. The light of the swift-burning match brought her face out of the darkness like a cameo.

"Isn't that altogether curious and delightful," she said. "I wonder."

"I don't know what will offer," Caleb said. "I cannot wait too long. I have neither the means nor the inclination to stay idle. I have not had very much practical experience—as such things go—but I should rather tie up with a new enterprise than work with a completed project. Of course, I should like above everything to be able to inaugurate some scheme, plan it, devolop it. I must look for my opportunity."

"That is what I should prefer, if I were a man," said the girl, and Caleb sensed a growing approval of him in her tone, and warmed to it. "To create something, to be a Water Bearer, to the thirsty earth or to thirsty people To make a city grow where none has been, or render dry lands fertile."

"Do you expect to settle out West?" asked Clinton. "To make your home here?"

"I hadn't gone quite as far as that," answered Caleb with a smile. "It depends upon whether I get the chance to settle—I mean by that if work opens up. I like the West. I should like to make a home here, I think. I have none elsewhere," he added simply. "I have relatives in the East, and I even own a house out there—but it isn't a home any longer, since both my father and mother are dead."

There are silences that create an atmosphere more sympathetic than the finest choice of phrase. Caleb found himself talking of his plans in greater extension than he would have considered possible to chance-met, recent acquaintances. He had, he told them, a little money, he had a chance to sell his Massachusetts house that held open indefinitely. This, with his training, and his youth, constituted his capital. At the end of the evening, in his room, the windows open, admitting the fragrance of the patio garden, the subdued chuckle of the overflow from the spring basin, he realized that he had done little but talk about himself and his own affairs.

He wondered whether he had not been a bit of a prig, even a bore. He had shown no appreciation of the girl's femininity, had surely been lacking in even conventional gallantry. Girls, Caleb believed, liked that sort of thing—expected it. Yet, talking to her in the dusk of the veranda had been a good deal like talking to another man. Her intelligence was keen, her interest had not seemed feigned.

"For a Yank," she told herself, as she arranged her hair for the night in two great, shining braids, "he is quite agreeable—so far. I think I am going to like Caleb Warner."

* * * * * * *

"We shall hope to see you again," said Clinton and Betty backed his invitation.

She seemed a little older this morning, appearing the well-poised hostess in her housegown. To Caleb, still new to western ways, it was hard to reconcile this housewifely person presiding over the silver coffee urn with the rider on the pinto, galloping hard after her hounds to the kill. Yet there was no real discrepancy, no loss of dignity, of sex. And she made the girls that Caleb had grown up with seem suddenly constricted in his recollection.

"You are not to walk down to the train," she told him. "I am sorry that I cannot drive you but I have a lot to do. You shall ride the Don. Padilla will go with you and bring him back. And we are to see you again. Soon."

Caleb was not at all certain of his prowess in the saddle. To his relief the horse turned out to be a natural single-footer, racking along with a smooth motion that left him almost motionless in the saddle. The selection was, he felt, another indication of kindly tact.

Padilla, swarthy, bow-legged, agile, bore signs of battle that had come close to maiming him. The left side of his face was marked with a puckered scar, purple against his brown skin. It ran from eye to chin, a raking weal that showed where the flesh must have been laid open by a frightful blow. He wore no coat and his sleeves were rolled high. His left forearm was scored with cicatrices. His left side seemed shrunken between hip and shoulder. Caleb was conscious that all down the canyon, Padilla subjected him to a close scrutiny. When directly in front of him he could almost feel Padilla's black eyes boring between his shoulder blades. Despite the unworded recommendation that the Mexican held from his employment at El Nido, Caleb fancied him a better companion for high noon than a dark night.

The trail dipped down towards water level, fording the stream. Caleb reined in to let the Don drink the bright water and Padilla followed example. As they sat side by side the Mexican spoke for the first time.

"Eet was here, senor," he said, "that I got these."

"Eet was a puma, senor. A cougar, a lion of the mountains. Carrajo! Almost eet keel me, Luis Padilla. Knife against claws an' teeth, senor. And the knife ween. Thees knife."

With the same swift deftness he half drew a shining blade from a sheath that was tucked inside the belt of his trousers, then replaced it. The speedy excitation of the Latin convulsed his features. They twisted in a ferocious snarl, they looked as they must have appeared in the actual conflict, Caleb thought.

This Padilla seems to be an intense sort of person. What's his purpose with Warner?

Old Abraham Stuck to Middle of Road

A man and his wife took in an aged and supposedly wealthy relative to live with them, thinking they would profit when the old fellow passed away. Later they learned that he hadn't much money, and they were anxious to get rid of him.

They agreed between themselves that they would start an argument at dinner. The husband would claim that the soup was too salty; the wife would declare that it was not salty enough. They would leave the matter to old Abraham. If he agreed with the wife, the husband would throw him out. If he agreed with the husband, the wife would throw him out. Consequently, at dinner, the husband said: "Rachel, this soup is too salty."

Rachel tasted the soup, and said, "No, my dear, the soup is not salty enough."

"Then," said the husband, "we will leave it to Abraham, and see what he says about it. Abraham, what do you think: Is the soup too salty or is it not salty enough?"

Old Abraham, who was enjoying his soup, didn't hesitate, but said, between sips, "Vell, it suits me."—Los Angeles Times.

Seek More Nicotine

Nicotine, not less of it, but more, is wanted by tobacco-breeding plant scientists at the state agricultural experiment station at Geneva, N. Y. This reversal of usual tobacco requirements is being sought for the benefit of the insecticide industry, which makes large use of nicotine in the manufacture of insect poisons. Certain "wild" tobaccos are being found more promising than the cultivated varieties and are being experimented with to learn ways of increasing their already high nicotine content.

Jumper Frocks Are Popular; "Manteau de Voyage" From Paris

PICKING out jumper frocks mu. stand somewhere near the head of the list of favorite pastimes with the rank and file of women this season. For sports—and near sports—and for all daytime wear, they are promoting the two-piece vogue in their summer wardrobes. The two-piece dress has therefore been developed in numberless pretty, informal varieties and appears even among evening costumes. But for sports and general summer daytime wear it stands at the forefront.

There are a good many mediums used for making two-piece dresses, but flannel in white, or high and pastel colors, in plain or striped patterns, is the favorite. The plain flannels are used for simple, unlined coats, and for severely tailored suits. The coats are sometimes finished with braid or grosgrain ribbon and sometimes with Iceland fox. On white kasha or flannel coats, standing collars and patch pockets, in rose or other colored flannel, are embroidered with white angora wool, and ensembles made up of white flannel coats and silk frocks are among the best of midsummer offerings.

Gay, striped flannels find their best field in sports clothes and are exploited there in many ways. The dashing jumper suit pictured has a skirt of red flannel and a jumper in white striped with red, with collar and cuffs of the plain flannel. One of the distinctive touches of this season appears in the band of the striped flannel stitched to the skirt and finished with red buttons.

Navy blue flannel jackets of mannish cut make themselves very useful in the summer wardrobe worn with white or pastel colored skirts. The skirts are nearly always plaited with the plaits arranged in groups or at one side. The same jackets extend their usefulness when provided with skirts in navy and white shepherd's check, or with a self-color skirt in crepe—they may be worn everywhere.

Somehow "manteau de voyage" seems to convey to the mind something more pleasurable than our plain English "traveling coat" does—something more than mere travel is suggested by the graceful French term. One has visions of comfortable journeys and pleasure trips to picturesque places when the conversation is of manteau de voyage and a hint of elegance is embodied in these two coats sent over by Lelong and O'Rossen for our vacation journeyings.

Lelong has given to the coat at the left the smartest of all smart style requisites, and that is appropriateness. There is hardly an emergency of travel that this coat could not meet. It is made of a soft wool goods in dark red and is fastened with metal buttons. Its lines are easy and graceful, it has an ample scarf at the neck and simple but exquisite tailoring in the finishing touches. The O'Rossen coat at the right is a bit more rugged and a bit more dashing, with sleeves in the raglan style, strap decorations at the wrist and pockets and bone buttons It might be developed in tweed or any plain, soft and substantial wool fabric..

Navy-blue twill is one of the most satisfactory materials for traveling coats. Very chic models are shown this summer with short detachable capes buttoned to the shoulders or about the neck. Sometimes they are lined with crepe in high contrasting color, as cherry, red or chartreuse green. The detachable cape is convenient for journeys that take one to a variety of climates. Coats of checked materials—as kasha or novelty tweed—cut on mannish lines and three-quarter length fit in with almost every environment.

Black Satin

Black satin vies with the newer materials and colors, and one is quite safe in stating that its vogue equals and in many instances surpasses the more recent novelties in the fabric world.

Ostrich Feather Fancies

Flaring velvet coats lavishly trimmed with fur, and new hats, although still very simple in line, have trailing ostrich feather fancies.

New Styles in Hats

There are many new developments in millinery, first in importance is the turban which is developed in felt and in silk and in metal fabrics. Next comes the large hat, untrimmed and exceedingly smart.

Bat-Wing Ties

Small bat-wing ties of dotted foulard in the gayest color combinations are worn with the smart little one or two-piece sports dresses.

The other day we heard a plebeian remark that Sheriff Midgley was too zealous in arresting drunks. We ask the guy who made such an untidy suggestion to consider for one moment what a job the Sheriff has! My! My! What nasty birds he has to deal with! How could he possibly be "over-zealous"? Nix on that stuff, Brother! Sheriff Midgley is so much different from his predecessor that even the song birds in the cocoanut trees sit up and take notice. Bates used to go out and arrest 'em by the dozen. Bates was an expert at arresting, but somehow his little sleight-of-hand sleeve trick usually got said soaks kicked out of the back door without much ado. Now-a-days when a drunk is pinched he don't stay in long enough to mildew, but is at once taken into court and gets his dose. Judging by the way Midgley goes after intoxicated drivers of automobiles and booze toters, he is not strong for the Bates stuff.

Edson Benge heard some disturbance near his market on Monday evening about 12:30 and a car parked in front of his residence. In a few minutes a car was started which stood just east of the market and went north at a high speed. Mr. Benge at once thought of his Ford runabout which he had parked near the market, and decided to investigate. He secured a search light and found his runabout was gone. Evidently two men had come into town from the south and their Ford Coupe had given out. They left the coupe in front of Mr. Benge's residence and stole the runabout. Deputy Sheriff Alpaugh and Mr. Benge at one started in chase and went to Jackson but no clues of the thieves were obtained On Wednesday Mr. Benge's car was discovered at Quincy and returned to North Adams on Wednesday by Sheriff Midgle.

The Burke & Post auction at Gray Goose Beach was attended by a fair crowd and all the lots were closed out, and we note that a number of them went to North Adams people. We believe the venture will be a paying one as it is only a matter of a short time when every lake in Southern Michigan will be snapped up for pleasure resort purposes,

The real cause of the World war, it is now claimed, was the original quarrel for a throne down in Austria, where a small dependency of Germany rebelled and a ruler was assassinated by hired murderers, At once Germany attempted to punish the guilty parties and restore order, but immediately found the instigators were under national protection. Every jealous rival of Germany at once began to make threats. Germany at once prepared secretly for war and used defenceless Belgium as a shield to resist France.

William Anderson had the misfortune to lose his new Ford Sedan last Saturday evening as it was stolen by parties unknown who made a clean get-away as far as known. Upon deciding to go home after the picture show Mr. Anderson found his Sedan was missing, also a basket of groceries in the machine. He at once notified the Sheriff but diligent search failed to reveal any clues. The same evening a gentleman in the rear of Wertz' store noticed a couple of men tinkering with the doors of Montie Shults' new Sedan. Upon seeing they were watched the two men bolted east down the alley. Fortunately the doors were locked.

Thin Out Your Peach Crop

This season the growers of peaches all over this county are optimistic indeed as never has the trees and young fruit looked anymore promising. Only the large well graded fruits are bringing good prices therefore it behooves the grower to see to it the crop is protected. Professors at the M. S. C. are recommending that thinning be carried out extensively this season and the old rule of a peach every six inches is a good one to follow.

S. J. Pullen of Hillsdale whom we interviewed recently says his big orchard is loaded to its utmost capacity and he is already thinning severely but he expects to receive the biggest crop in years. Prognostigators are claiming a crop of aggregate 12,000,000 bushels more than last year. Whether these boys are wild in their guesses or not remains to be proved later on.

Big Show At Adrian

"Yoo-hoo! Skinny! Lookit! Lookit!" World's first and only 5 ring circus coming this way! A hundred double length railroad cars loaded with ten thousand wonders of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey's combined shows that will give performances at Adrian July 8th. Never in the past has there been more than three rings. Now the famous brother showmen have fixed it so that folks at both ends of the tent can see just as much as these who sit near the middle, which means that five companies of performing horses, 24 in each group, are presented at one time. The same is true of the elephants—5 herds all performing at once. The show comprises 1,000 animals and eight hundred performers also a big army of roustabouts and stake drivers. Adrian July 8th.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Politics in Pennsylvania as Revealed to the Senate Committee of Inquiry.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DISGUST rather than astonishment was the emotion generally aroused by the revelation of political corruption made before the senate committee investigating the recent Pennsylvania primary contest. Though the total of money expended in the campaign for the Republican senatorial nomination and other offices was extraordinary—in round figures $2,000,000—the fact that political conditions in the Keystone state were rotten was not "news."

Congressman William S. Vare, who defeated Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot for the nomination, told the committee the expenses of his organization were nearly $600,000; but he insisted only a fraction of this should be charged up to his own candidacy. The remaindr, he said, was expended in the interest of the candidacies of Beidleman for governor, James for lieutenant governor, Ward for secretary of internal affairs, and of scores of congressmen, state legislators and state, county and precinct committeemen constituting the Vare organization, and a considerable proportion of the 5,000 candidates for all offices in that primary. For himself, it was necessary to carry on a gigantic letter-writing campaign because the newspapers of the state were all against him and would give him no publicity.

According to other witnesses, the Pepper-Fisher campaign, which was backed by the Mellons, cost in the neighborhood of $1,100,000; the main purpose in that fight being to retain the leadership in the state Republican organization for Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. That gentleman said in an interview that he thought the committee would find all the expenditures were legitimate and essential in the circumstances. Huge sums were paid out to "watchers" employed in great numbers, but Mr. Mellon said these watchers were legalized under the Pennsylvania law. The sources of the funds interested the committee very much. Senator Reed, chairman, inquired especially into the $307,575 contribution made by Joseph R. Grundy, president of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' association, and the $90,000 note signed jointly by Grundy and Folwell, seeking to compel the latter to admit that they confidently expect that note, at least, to be fully repaid. It was obvious to observers that the senator suspected that the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' association would reimburse Grundy and Folwell.

Mayor Kline of Pittsburgh was an embarrassed and angry witness. He was questioned concerning a speech in which he was quoted as threatening city employees with discharge if they did not deliver their wards and precincts to Pepper. At first he strenuously denied the accuracy of the report, but when it appeared that the account of the speech was transcribed from stenographic reports, Kline admitted he might have said some of the things attributed to him.

Harry A. Mackey, city treasurer of Philadelphia and chairman of the Vare campaign committee, entertained and enlightened the committee with his frank testimony, but he denied that any of the contenders in the primary had spent a penny to buy votes or that there was any debauchery of the ballot box in Pennsylvania. He asserted that Vare's candidacy was a mere incident in the whole campaign and that every cent of $596,000 or more that was spent for the ticket would have been spent if the senatorship had not been at stake at all.

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon league, having stated publicly that liquor dealers and wets generally had made large contributions to the Vare campaign fund, was promptly subpoenaed by the committee. Reed then had a chance to examine Wheeler concerning the league's pay roll in congress and its political activities generally. The names of many senators and representatives who are paid for dry speeches were revealed.

JOHN CARDINAL BONZANO was given an extraordinary welcome on his arrival in New York, Gov. Al Smith and Mayor Walker heading the demonstration in honor of the legate of the pope. Monsignor Bonzano then, with nine other cardinals and other high churchmen, was carried in a specially designed and decorated train to Chicago for the Eucharistic Congress. There the party was met by cheering thousands and escorted through the handsomely bedecked city in an impressive parade to the Holy Name cathedral, where a te deum was sung and the legate was formally welcomed by Cardinal Mundelein. On Sunday the Eucharistic Congress was opened by the celebration of mass in the cathedral, which was lavishly decorated. President Coolidge was unable to go to Chicago, but was represented by Secretary of Labor Davis.

WHEN the French franc had another bad slump, to 37 to the dollar, Finance Minister Peret gave up the job of saving it and resigned. He was followed out by the entire cabinet, but President Doumergue persuaded M. Briand to remain as premier, and that veteran undertook to create a "national union" cabinet which might obtain a right-center majority in parliament. It was said Poincare was offered the post of finance minister with the understanding that he should not treat the ideas of the left too roughly, and the radical Socialists after a stormy meeting gave permission to Heriot to enter the cabinet if he wished. The radicals are in the majority but admit they cannot handle the country's finances. In their caucus they decided unanimously that the Berenger accord on the French debt to the United States was on the whole very advantageous to France.

BRAZIL, as was expected, has announced her withdrawal from the League of Nations, giving the two years' notice required by the covenant. President Bernardes sent the notice to the secretary general at Geneva. He goes out of office in November and the league supporters have some hope that his successor, Senhor Luis, may withdraw the resignation. Otherwise, they fear, the league may before many years find itself made up only of European nations. The representatives of other South American nations say their governments will not be influenced by Brazil's action, but probably if South America is deprived of any of its three nonpermanent seats in the council there will be other withdrawals. Spain may resign anyway, and there are indications that China and Persia may leave the league because Asia has been given no permanent seat. Dictator Primo de Rivera still insists Spain must have a permanent seat in the council if Germany is granted one, and it is predicted that if Spain resigns there will be formed a Spanish-speaking league including South and Central America.

ADOPTING the motion of General Lassiter, its chairman, the Tacna-Arica plebiscitary commission declared the proposed plebiscite, to determine whether those provinces should belong to Peru or Chile, was impracticable because of the impossibility of establishing sufficient guarantees to insure a fair vote. Chile was blamed for existing conditions, and the angry Chilean government cabled its ambassador to Washington to break off the diplomatic negotiations for settlement of the quarrel with Peru. Thus seemingly the whole effort to compose that old dispute has collapsed, and it is feared in Washington that the failure will be a severe blow to the prestige of the United States throughout the western hemisphere. The Chileans are enraged, and the entire chamber of deputies arose and cheered leading members who violently denounced the United States and General Lassiter and attacked the Monroe doctrine.

COUNT SKRZYNSKI, former premier of Poland, and General Szeptychi, chief aide to Marshal Pilsudski, fought a picturesque duel with pistols in Cracow. At the word of command the general fired, the bullet grazing the count's scalp. The count then aimed at his adversary's head and dropped his weapon without firing, saying: "I do not know how to miss and I don't want to kill. I refrained from firing. Whoever in Poland, in his honor or conscience, thinks he has a right to shoot at me and that which I represent, let him shoot. I won't shoot back."

The referee decided the honor of all parties had been vindicated. The affair grew out of the general's refusal to accept the ex-premier's proffered hand after a political dispute.

UNDER the terms of the debt-funding agreements, ten nations paid into the United States treasury last week a total of $77,783,127. Great Britain and Italy paid in securities; Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Hungary, Poland, Lithuania, Rumania and Finland paid in cash.

COL. CARMI A. THOMPSON of Cleveland, accompanied by Mrs. Thompson, two secretaries and some press correspondents has sailed from Seattle for the Philippines, commissioned by the President to make a complete survey of the government of the islands and of general conditions there; and it is possible he will extend his inquiry to other American insular possessions in the Pacific. He goes as the personal representative of Mr. Coolidge and has a free hand, and it is not unlikely that his trip will result in the devising of a new system of government for the Philippines, Samoa and Guam by which a civil commission would replace the army and navy in authority and would report directly to the President. At Manila he will put himself in full accord with Governor General Wood, whose official acts have the approval of the administration.

SECRETARY MELLON probably gave the corn-belt farm relief bill its death blow when, in response to the request of Representatives Haugen, Dickinson and Anthony for his views, he declared the measure economically unsound and inherently harmful to both producers and consumers. His expression was taken to mean that President Coolidge would veto the bill if it were passed.

The sale abroad of crop surpluses at lower prices than obtained on the American market would amount, in the opinion of Secretary Mellon, to subsidizing foreign competition with American industry and with American labor, whose buying power would also be reduced by increased cost of food. The treasury head thinks the plan would operate to increase production and decrease consumption, thereby producing a still greater surplus.

The soundest policy of farm aid, according to Secretary Mellon, is to develop orderly co-operative marketing, eliminating waste between producer and consumer and to effect an increase in prices at home through stimulation of foreign demand for American farm products. Foreign demand can be increased, says the secretary, by the restoration of European monetary stability and consequent capacity to buy, which may be expected from the settlement of the war debts and financial assistance by American bankers and investors.

Corn-belt legislators were enraged by the secretary's letter and denounced him and the administration unsparingly. There were open threats of a revolt within the Republican party in November, and the Democrats were quick to take advantage of the situation. After a conference of leaders, Senator Robinson defined his party stand, which is against the corn-belt bill, but in favor of the Carl Vrooman measure providing for government loans to promote foreign buying of American farm products and in favor of tariff revision for the benefit of the farmer. Senator Robinson called upon his fellow Democrats and the dissatisfied western Republicans to join now and keep congress in session until the tariff is revised and farm relief legislation passed.

TWELVE senators, mostly from the lake states, have made an agreement to filibuster against the omnibus rivers and harbors bill because it carries the authorization for the Illinois link of the lakes-to-the-gulf waterway. The filibusters are led by Willis of Ohio and they planned to delay the measure as long as possible in committee and to talk it to death on the senate floor. Senator Deneen of Illinois said the bill could not be killed by such tactics, and house leaders declared congress would not adjourn until the bill was passed.

Florida Editor Warms Up to Advertising Possibilities

Larkin Cleveland Editor of the DeFuniak (Florida) paper has this to say regarding the wonderful possibilities of his paper as an advertising sheet:

"Barney Stanley, Mr. Darwin's "missing link" and West Florida's leading grocer, whose advertisement has disfigured the pages of this paper from week to week ever since he went into business, is in despair. He dropped into the Temple of Truth an hour ago, with his eyes bulged out like door knobs and a yard of his tongue hanging out, flopped down in the mercy seat of the sanctum sanctorium and remarked that he'd "be dad burned", or words to that effect. We knew from his looks that he wanted to be "interviewed" and we "bit" by asking what the dickens was the matter with him. With a low, moaning sob he laid his head on our broad shoulder and gurgled:

"Cleve, I'm in a whole passel of trouble, and it's all on account of having more prosperity than I know what to do with. You know that fool ad. you run for me, Cleve. Well, I'm thinking I'm going to have to ask you to leave it out for a week or two and let me get a little rest and catch up with my sleep. We are kept so busy at the store that my clerks are threatening to quit and my business has grown to such proportions that I am up a stump to know what to do about it. To give you an idea of the size and growth of my business: In 1492, the year that Christopher Columbus licked George Washington and the Pilgrim Fathers at the battle of Chickamauga, I did a gross business of only $7,263,409 the entire year. In 1776, the year that Bob Fitzsimmons knocked out Sitting Bull and some other cattle, my regular monthly business had grown to a trifle better than $36,758,622 and I had hopes that the zenith of my prosperity had been reached. Last month my business amounted to the sum of $572,794,738,961,748,604.29. The clerks at my store are working over-time putting up the bills and checks into bales as big as a bag of wool and shoveling the silver and small change into wheel barrows so it can be carted to the bank. I have an old hen out home that has started laying so fast that the children can't pick up the eggs as fast as she lays them. Something must be done, Cleve, and done quickly. Suppose you leave out the ad. next week."

At the business meeting of the North Adams High School Alumni held on Friday evening June 11, following officers were elected: President, James Post; vice president, Arthur Holcomb; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Grace Corbett Barker. At the annual banquet Rev. Burley Lamb spoke very engagingly of consolidation of churches, which is a good subject to talk on and looks good on paper, but will never come to pass until Hell freezes over, and not until then can the Reverend expect to see these churches consolidated. This sounds rough but we don't mean it sacrilegiously at all. Just literally—that's all. When ice forms over Hell, there will be no need of more than one church. These churches were put here for a purpose and God knows there are too few of them now and too many non religious orders, and furthermore many of the largest churches in Detroit, Chicago and New York are actually supported by interests outside of religion which looks bad for the pious, but don't indicate the business world thinks we are over-churched. We challenge any man to prove that any community or village is ever over-churched, except to the detriment of the prostitute, the thug, the bum, the booze toter, the hold-up or the nasty dozen who practice Sabbath desecration. Talk it to the marines! It looks as if religion had gone on a holiday and spirituality had flown up the chimney. Reconstructionists are cunningly advising us that in union there is strength—but the ultimate result will be chaos.

Poultry School To Train Farm Judges

Michigan poultry raisers will have opportunity to brush up on the latest developments of their profession during a special Poultry Judging School which is to be held at the M. S. C. during the week of July 5 this year. It will be the third annual school of this kind at East Lansing.

Practical instruction and laboratory practice in various phases of poultry production, from the point of view of both the farm and the commercial flock, will be given during the school week.

Staff of specialists who will handle the work of the school, in addition to M. S. C. men, will include many national authorities in the poultry world. Among them will be: W. R. Graham, Ontario Agricultural College; Prot. J. G. Halpin, University of Wisconsin; and W. G. Crum, Cornell University.

Programs and information about the special school, which is open to any Michigan poultry raiser, may be had from the Poultry Department at M. S. C.

Hundreds of farmers from Hillsdale and southern Jackson counties will gather at Mosherville, in the former county, on July 31 to witness a marl digging demonstration under the auspices of the M. S. C. extension staff. Large areas of Michigan soil have been shown to be in need of lime or marl applications to correct acidity, and demonstrations such as the one scheduled for Hillsdale county aim at showing possibilities of utilizing the state's natural deposits of marl.

First Test In America Of Radio Telephony On Freight Trains Made By New York Central

The first tests made in America of two-way radio telephone communication, as an aid to operation of freight trains, are being conducted by the New Central Railroad, it was announced by the railroad today at its head-quarters in New York. These tests indicate, railroad officials say, the advent of a new era in freight train operation.

"Tests already made on the Western Division of the New York Central between Elkhart and Pinola, Ind. have demonstrated clearly that successful radio telephone service can be maintained between conductor or brakeman in the caboose and the engineman or fireman on the engine of freight trains up to 100 or more cars in length," said E. C. Keenan, General Superintendent Telegraphand Telephone New York Central Lines. Heretofore, the only means of communication between the front and rear of the train has been by hand or lamp signals.

In the tests a New York Central freight train, consisting of engine 2626 with 11 cars and caboose, was used. The train started from Elkhart at 4 p. m. and for five hours continuous and satisfactory radio telephone conversation was carried on between the railroad men in the caboose and those on the engine. In this period there occurred a severe electrical and rain storm, but despite this, the radio telephone conversations were clearly audible and no interference was experienced. There was no severance of communication around curves or when the train was midway beneath steel bridges. The passing of other train on adjacent tracks also did not interfere.

A special test to determine the value of the radio should the train break in two, such as occasionally happens in 100-car freight trains that are now frequently operated, was made. The train was stopped at Hudson Lake, Ind. and the locomotive was detached, and run ahead to a point just east of Rolling Prairie, four miles distant. Throughout the entire distance communication was maintained readily with the engine and always with good loud speaker volume. Equally good results were obtained when the engine was stopped and while it was backing up to be coupled to the train.

The preliminary tests are being made by the New York Central in co-operation with the Zenith Radio Corporation of Chicago and under the sponsorship of the Telegraph and Telephone Section of the American Railway Association The trainmaster, conductor, engineman and trainmen who used the sets are all enthusiastic as to the success and practical utility of the radio in train operation. These tests indicate that radio telephony will probably prove to be wonderful aid in the handling of freight trains as well as in general train operations.

The radio equipment placed on both the engine and caboose consisted of special receiving-transmitting sets (made by the Zenith Radio Corporation of Chicago), with the necessary motor generator batteries and loud speaking receiver. An antennae consisting of 32 feet of ½ inch brass pipe supported on special brackets located 12 inches above the cab roof, was used on the engine and on the onboose the receiver was made of insulated wire mounted on supports. The special transmitting-receiving sets contained seven tubes-three for transmitting and four for receiving. The transmitting tubes consist of 50.watt oscillator, 50 watt modulator and 7½ watts for speech amplification. A wave length of 115 meters was employed.

the successful operation of the farm in its constant relation to the dairy markets supplied. The milking schedule and the cream separating "chore" represent the most important of these.

Dairy farms in various parts of the country have long been using electric milking machines and electric cream separators. In both instances, the time and drudgery saved by the electrical method have opened a new era of country life for the farm owner, his hired help and his whole family.

The entire farm, of course, is also electrically lighted, this part of the equipment running up to 400 watts and including the use of electric lights for increasing the egg production of the chickens in the winter. Much of the farm's equipment, naturally, might be found on farms of any type, but this is thought to represent a fairly typical and fairly complete case of electrification for a dairy farm.

EXPOSES WILES OF FAKE STOCK SALESMEN AND PROMOTERS

By W. R. MOREHOUSE,
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association.

ARTICLE NO. I

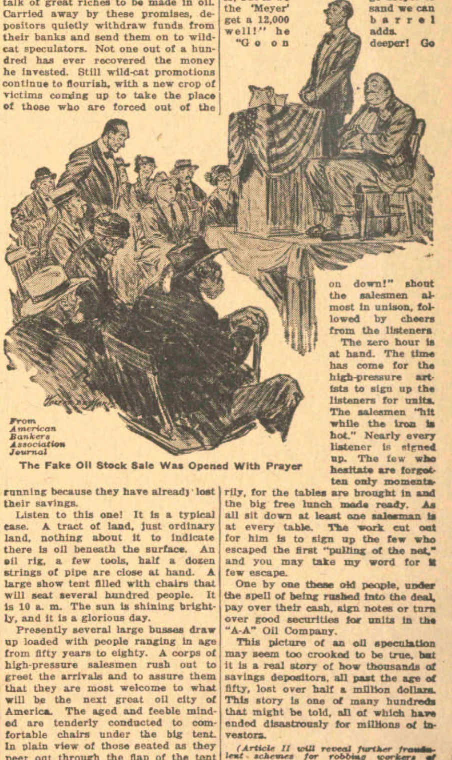
MUCH of the distress of many people in America today is due, not to the fact that they have not had an opportunity to earn and save money, but to the fact that they have lost their savings in fraudulent schemes of one kind or another. Many a widow is in financial difficulty not because she was left penniless by her husband but because she lost her inheritance by investing it in "gold bricks." Many a bank depositor who once carried a fine balance is penniless today not because he did not know how to save but because he did not know how to invest.

W. R. Morehouse

Perhaps if I relate some wild-cat promotions that give an insight into the activities of investment sharks it will quicken a relentless determination to provide depositors with much needed advice in investment matters. I have come in personal contact with many cases, some of them almost unbelievable because of the very crookedness of the schemes to defraud, yet thousands of our hard-working savers have been led to invest their savings in these promotions. In giving the high lights of certain cases I am not drawing on my imagination in the least, nor am I relying on hearsay, but giving first-hand information.

Unbelievable but True

Many millions of dollars have been lost in oil. The sum is staggering. Into ever corner of the United States the mails carry high-powered sales talk of great riches to be made in oil. Carried away by these promises, depositors quietly withdraw funds from their banks and send them on to wild-cat speculators. Not one out of a hundred has ever recovered the money he invested. Still wild-cat promotions continue to flourish, with a new crop of victims coming up to take the place of those who are forced out of the running because they have already lost their savings.



From American Bankers Association Journal

The Fake Oil Stock Sale Was Opened With Prayer

Listen to this one! It is a typical case. A tract of land, just ordinary land, nothing about it to indicate there is oil beneath the surface. An oil rig, a few tools, half a dozen strings of pipe are close at hand. A large show tent filled with chairs that will seat several hundred people. It is 10 a. m. The sun is shining brightly, and it is a glorious day.

Presently several large busses draw up loaded with people ranging in age from fifty years to eighty. A corps of high-pressure salesmen rush out to greet the arrivals and to assure them that they are most welcome to what will be the next great oil city of America. The aged and feeble minded are tenderly conducted to comfortable chairs under the big tent. In plain view of those seated as they peer out through the flap of the tent stands majestically the oil rig spattered with crude oil and nearby is the big oil sump also filled with oil. Through an ingenious circulating system oil from the sump flows into the well and back into the sump through a pipe in full view.

Religious Revival Methods

Presently the official lecturer calls the meeting to order. The impression he creates is that he is either a minister or has studied for the ministry. He opens the meeting with prayer for the success of the venture in oil. After prayer this sanctimonious gentleman tells how he has invested all of his own earnings and all of his children's savings in the venture, so confident is he that it is to be an oil gusher and all are to be made rich.

He charms his audience with his oratory. He impresses them with his honesty. He calls their attention to oil in plain view, intimating that it is from the well. And while he is painting before them, figuratively speaking, luxury and old age comforts if they invest in the "A-A" Oil Company, the foreman of the rig rushes in, his clothes spattered with crude oil. He is excited and almost out of breath as he reaches the sanctimonious lecturer. A few words are whispered. The lecturer's face registers great delight at the news. He turns back to his audience, a smile of victory on his face. The foreman rushes excitedly back to the derrick, wrench in hand.

"We have drilled to the 'Bell' sand!" the lecturer shouts, bringing cheers from every high-pressure salesman, followed by a chorus of voices from the surprised audience. "We can bring in a 5 000 barrel well if we care to, but if we go deeper to the 'Meyer' sand we can get a 12,000 barrel well!" he adds. "Go on deeper! Go on down!" shout the salesmen almost in unison, followed by cheers from the listeners.

The zero hour is at hand. The time has come for the high-pressure artists to sign up the listeners for units. The salesmen "hit while the iron is hot." Nearly every listener is signed up. The few who hesitate are forgotten only momentarily, for the tables are brought in and the big free lunch made ready. As all sit down at least one salesman is at every table. The work cut out for him is to sign up the few who escaped the first "pulling of the net," and you may take my word for it few escape.

One by one these old people, under the spell of being rushed into the deal, pay over their cash, sign notes or turn over good securities for units in the "A-A" Oil Company.

This picture of an oil speculation may seem too crooked to be true, but it is a real story of how thousands of savings depositors, all past the age of fifty, lost over half a million dollars. This story is one of many hundreds that might be told, all of which have ended disastrously for millions of investors.

(Article II will reveal further fraudulent schemes for robbing workers of their savings.)

Truth and Advertising Have Made America Great

Truth in news columns and advertising is the foundation of America's prosperity, Melvin A. Traylor, Second Vice President American Bankers Association, recently said, adding:

"Continuance of our prosperity rests chiefly upon continuation of the greatest of all causes for our present good times—truth in news columns, truth over the store counters and truth in advertising. World-wide acceptance of great discoveries and inventions has been due to the fact that the newspapers truthfully described them and the manufacturers truthfully advertised them. If deceit had been the general rule, if the motto had been 'sell quick and let the buyer beware,' the public would have turned against the new things. I recall one particularly large firm which three years ago began advertising its wares falsely; it is today hopelessly bankrupt.

"Wise advertising costs nothing. You have only to increase the sale of your products to the point that covers the advertising charge to enjoy the enlarged business without cost. The natural saving in overhead is extra profit for dividends or for further expansion."

Our young people suffer, as perhaps the young folk of no other age have suffered, from bad example set them by older folk. Many of the older folk in our churches are just as crazy about amusements as any group of youngsters. Is it just to blame boys and girls for wanting things we feel will do them harm when middleaged folk, who ought to be setting them the example of stabilized living, seem to indicate by box office receipts that the highest form of dramatic art is "Abie's Irish Rose"? I wonder if we have not entered on that first phase of abandonment to pleasure that has always been a precedent of national decay? I do not regard myself as a pessimist but I cannot help thinking the signs of the times are very ominous. We cannot help going down in ruin as a nation unless there is a very speedy revival of Christian Idealism within the churches of the land. When ever there is a robust spiritual life manifest within any group, things are seen in their true nature and fall into their proper place. Real religion will help folks settle the amusement question. When questionable amusements are attractive it is a certain sign of the poverty of spiritual life.

Parents must take their responsibilities toward their families seriously. My dog gets more care and better training than many a boy in Michigan ever receives. The atmosphere of the home means every thing. It is there that the soul is set in the direction in which it continues to travel.

When the home fails to function as the place where ideals and tastes of youth are shaped to serve the highest end the time has come to hang out the crepe. Are we coming to that time in America? Let no one answer this without heeding the words of many of the finest people in the country who are in constant touch with wayward youth and whose contacts are making them understand what the forces are that contribute to youthful delinquency. "No home life worth the name" is a not infrequent comment of these students of causes.

In closing the writer desires to say that for three years he had close contact with men and boys while serving as a chaplain in the Canadian army and also, for two years after the war, as a teacher of sex hygiene in the schools of Michigan under the direction of the State Department of Health. During the later term he had personal interviews with thousands of boys and their opinion, freely given in the course of ordinary conversation of what constitutes the danger spots for youth was:

1. The Dance.
2 Unchaperoned Automobile Riding.
3. Cheap Movies, and the Sensational Movies with passionate scenes portrayed with much detail.

The writer could give many records of conversations with school superintendents, principals, and teachers, in which the most dreadful conditions were laid bare. And many of these teachers confessed themselves as utterly helpless in mending conditions for lack of support from parents and the public.

This is all I have to say on the matter, save to add that I speak for myself alone and am willing to let others have their own opinion about it. I am certain that the best supporters I have ever had as a Christian minister have not usually been found among the dancing and card playing crowd. Christ generally loses out when folks begin to trip the light fantastic toe.

I feel grieved when I see the Y. W. C. A. notices about dancing parties. The Church and its institutions stand to point a life that finds its satisfactions in better ways than that, and I think the whole sale letting down of bars on the amusement question is certain to end in disaster so far as the spiritual power of the "Y" goes. That is the way I feel. I do not think we have to everlastingly compromise with the world. Better to fail than live questionably and pass muster. The more I think matters over the more I feel we have come to a time when there needs to be a house-cleaning beginning with the Methodist Church as existing in some places.

If Christ means anything to men He certainly changes their outlook on life at every point. And one of the things He demands is that we indulge in nothing that may have a bad reaction on our fellows, regardless of how innocent it may be for us. The moment you begin to organize certain amusements you create a taste that is going farther than your church hall for its satisfaction. When you have nothing doing in the hall, the commercial halls are open. And the step is easily taken. When the habit is formed—Good-bye, God, is all too often, although not always, the result.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

To Demonstrate New Hay Making Methods

Most efficient methods of handling Michigan's 57 million dollar hay crop will be shown in a series of county hay days or demonstrations which are to be held through out the state this summer under the auspices of the crops department at the M. S. C.

The first of the demonstrations was scheduled for Wastenaw County June 14 and 15, while the series will end in Antrim County on July 9. Sixteen counties are already listed for "shows", while several more will be added, according to L. D. Kurtz, extension specialist at M. S. C who is arranging the hay days.

The hay crop is said to be the most valuable grown in Michigan, even exceeding corn, its nearest rival. A estimate that from five to ten dollars per ton can be saved on the crop by proper handling gives an idea of the importance of proper harvesting or "hay making" practices.

Newest methods of curing and handling the crop are brought out during the Hay Day meetings by actual demonstration in the field. Farmers in the territory surrounding each meeting gather for the day, watching the work and getting information on hay practices.

Fruit Growers Plan State Orchard Tour

The annual orchard tour of the Michigan State Horticultural Society will be held in the "Grand Traverse" district on July 23 and 24 this year, according to announcement just made here by H. D. Hootman, extension specialist at M. S. C. and secretary of the society.

Working out from Manistee and Traverse City, the route of the tour will include both leading orchard districts and also some of the most scenic drives in the state. Cherries in the famous orchards of the section will still be on the trees it is said.

Among the special features to be visited during the trip, according to Mr. Hootman's announcement, will be: the red raspberry section at Onekma; the Thrushwood orchards of A. J. Rogers, at Beulah; several other leading orchards in this same section; the Grand Traverse Packing Co., plant and the famous "Golden Tower" from which 250,000 fruit trees may be seen.

Unique Advertising Stunt

All the way from Sheffield England we recently received a communication advertising a safety razor blade of more than usual durability. The firm of Darwin & Miller of Sheffield, have invented a new form of steel for surgical instruments and razor blades called Cobalt Steel which is both rustless and stainless, holds the keenest possible edge indefinitely, and is guaranteed to withstand more abuse to the square inch than any other steel now used. Most of our readers have at some time or other heard of the world famous Sheffield cutlery, and we can remember the knives and forks our parents used so many years ago which they said came from the old country, Then of course Dad used to shave with his Wade & Butcher razor which used to ring lik a bell as he drew it down his countenance.

This firm is taking a new method of advertising its goods in America, sending us two sample safety razor blades which far excel anything we have ever seen for cutting qualities. So far as known no Americans have yet been able to produce anything which would stand up with the Sheffield grades of steel and cutlery that our fathers used one hundred years ago and our hardwares are selling to-day.

The treasurer of this county is still after those dog-goned dog taxes He has a list of 336 different sons of iniquity who own wattle eared pups and refuse to put up the necessary tax. He also has warrants for every dog-gasted one of them and the sheriff is going after them in a few days unless they liquidate. Does beat all how some humans will cleave to their dog-goned pups.

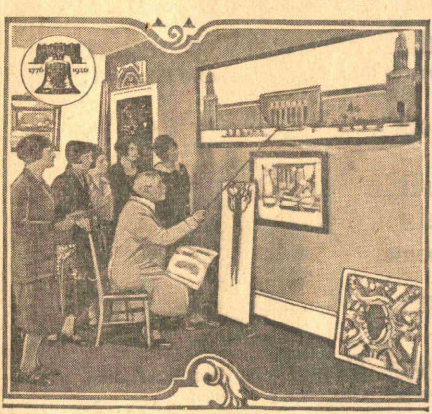
FAMOUS ARTIST INSTRUCTS

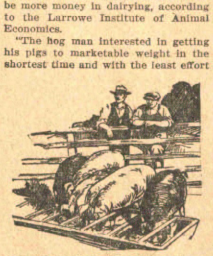


William de Leftwich Dodge, famous mural artist, in his studio at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition grounds in Philadelphia, where the 150th anniversary of signing the Declaration of Independence will be celebrated from June, to December, of this year, giving instructions to a group of young artists who are creating the "Rainbow City." Mr. Dodge is the color expert for the exposition, and every bit of color work done must be approved by him.

Will Boost Dairy Profits

If the dairyman fed his cows as the hog man feeds his pigs, there would be more money in dairying, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics.

"The hog man interested in getting his pigs to marketable weight in the shortest time and with the least effort and expense has tried ration after ration for his pigs until he is now pretty close to the best ration for accomplishing the result he is after," the Institute states. "For the hog man, the proof of the feed is in the feeding. Contrast this attitude with the attitude of the dairyman. Instead of finding out what a given ration will do with his own cows in his own barns, the dairyman has continued to make up his ration on the test-tube theory of chemical analysis, which has little to do with the amount of milk the cow will give. The dairyman tests out gasoline in his own car, but he feeds his cows on the ration arrived at with pencil and paper. Is it any wonder that under the standards of our present knowledge the average cow in view of her possibilities is not as good as the average hog?"



While the stomach of the cow is the only true guide on what a given ration will do for that cow, there are certain characteristic elements that every good dairy ration possesses, according to the Institute. In the first place, the ration should contain a variety of foods. It should be bulky and it should be palatable. But in the selection of his ration the dairyman who mixes his own feed is at a disadvantage to the dairyman using a ready mixed ration. There is a wide range of difference in the analysis of the ingredients or even different lots of the same ingredients that go into the making of a dairy ration, and it's not uncommon for the same dairyman's mixture to work out one week and be a failure the next. On the other hand, the commercial feed maker through actual tests with cows and the use of chemical and mechanical means to analyze and mix the many ingredients that go into their feed, are able to make a ration that is standardized and uniform and which will give similar results under like conditions.

Protection Against Diphtheria

Protection against diphtheria has been secured by 188,979 persons in Michigan since January, 1925, according to figures just made public by the Michigan Department of Health. Toxin-antitoxin sufficient to immunize this number has been sent out by the Department laboratory.

"This means", says Dr. R. M. Olin, State Commissioner of Health in discussing the report, "That approximately one-fourth of the 752,000 children of school age in Michigan are safe from diphtheria. It is a fine beginning. The next step is to make this equally true of preschool children—and then increase both groups."

In ten counties, the report shows physicians and nurses from the State Department of Health have assisted local health and school authorities in giving toxin-antitoxin to 29,500 persons. Ionia, Washtenaw, Cass, Presque Isle, Ogemaw, Montcalm, Baraga, Alger, Kent and Genesee were the counties visited. Many other communities carried on campaigns unassisted.

The importance of protecting the pre-school child is especially stressed by health authorities, since 80 percent of all diphtheria deaths are of children less than five years of age. It is also emphasized that no harmful effects result from the very mild toxin-antitoxin preparation now used.

Salesgirls Dread Bargain Days

Louisa was tired. From morning until night she had been on her feet in the busy department store. No matter how she felt, she must serve her customers with a smile. Her head throbbed and her feet ached. Week after week, she felt her strength ebbing until she was in a run-down condition, not fit to work.

"My mother suggested that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," she writes. "I took only three bottles and it brought me about all right." Through the Vegetable Compound, she found better health to do her work and she told the other girls about it.

That was several years ago. Louisa is now Mrs. L. G. Van Dyke of 1246 Spring St., Morrell Park, Baltimore, Md. She is the mother of three healthy, active children. She says that she found the tonic effect of the Vegetable Compound helpful to her during this critical period.

Every working girl knows that to do her work properly and easily she must have good health. She can not afford to lose time from her work.

Girls who suffer from weakness and run down condition should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Ask your neighbor.

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer."

"Thees knife is for all the enemy of El Nido." He patted the hilt of the weapon with a nod of complacency and a keen look at Caleb, who was wonderingly amused. Was the man half crazed? Did his twisted brain consider the stranger he had been ordered to escort as a possible menace to El Nido?

"The puma was an enemy?" he asked.

"Si senor. Eet lay there on that bough that overhangs the stream, the sycamore. On that bank, on the turf, below, play la senorita Betty. Her mother is then dead one year, la senorita she is two. Dios! She is in charge of Maria an' she, thees Maria, has tie her by one long reebbon to the trunk so she shall play weeth her flowers an' not fall een the creek. May the Mother of God forgeev Maria! An' me also, Luis Padilla! Senor, I am in love with Maria, we are to wed. I hav' leave my work, I hav' follow down the canyon to talk weeth Maria! We hav' a leetle quarrel, jus' to make up. She run a leetle way from me. I follow. In the wood we make up. Si. An' we forget the senorita.

"Dios! Of a sudden Maria scream an' point. There is the puma on the bough. Eet crouch to spreeng. The leetle one look up an' laugh at the great cat. An' I make to leap. Then I am young an' very queek, senor. Sanctissima Maria, eet is muy bueno, eet is ver' good that I am!"

Now Padilla was rolling a cigarette with a murmured, "eef you permit, senor," riding out of the water up to the little plateau where the thing had happened with a face as suddenly void of emotion as if a light had been switched off behind a shade, intent only upon inhaling the smoke of his cigarette, seated with one leg across the saddle horn. Caleb and the Don had followed him. The last puff taken, Padilla flung away the wisp of the cigarette end into the stream with a savage gesture and slid to the ground. Again he was in his role, now giving pantomime to aid his words in conjuring up the happening.

"Eet is by the mercy of the Good God that Maria tie the child, senor. I could not reach the leetle senorita in time but I reach that reebbon an' snatch her back—so! Jus' as that puma spreeng. I see heem above me, all spread. He blot out the sun an', as I snatch back the baby, he yell, like El Diablo himself. His eyes shine, his teeth, I see his red mouth, I smell the steenk of his breath, I try to dodge as he strike an' I too strike, weeth my knife. He come on me like the fall of the cleef. We roll over like two beast. Senor, I cannot tell jus' what happen. Eet is not the one who fight who can tell the story. Maria, she did not see. She hol' the baby in her arm, an' she see only the end.

"But I know I am all blood, my blood an' the blood of that lion, hot. The smell of eet make us both mad. I theenk he has empty my belly. Dios, he claw me like thees!" And Padilla raked himself down his shrunken side with suggestive fingers. He slash my face one time when I dodge. One time I am down an eet is growin' all dark. He take my arm like a dog take a bone. Senor, I hear those teeth on my bone. An' I stab, I steek, I cut! We roll into the creek. Me, I theenk I am almos' gone that time, but the water bring me back. Eet flow from me red with my blood. But eet flow red from the puma also. Senor, he is dead—muerte!

"When I get better I find the vaqueros who breeng me back to El Nido take also the body of that lion. They hev' for me that skin. Senor, eet is not much good, that skin. My knife has spoil' eet. But there is enough to make two little rug'. One for Maria, one for me. Those rug' each in our two room'—Maria an' mine—beneath the crucifix. When we pray we kneel on those rug an' we never forget our oath."

Again the fire of his speech suddenly died out and he rolled another cigarette.

"You are not married to Maria?" asked Caleb.

"No, senor. That was seventeen years ago. We wait. Eet was the great fault of Maria, also of me, that we leave la senorita. Senor Clinton did not punish. He geev me praise an' offer me money which I do not take. But we—we punish each the other. We punish that love which make us careless. We take the oath to God and the Mother of God that we watch always over the senorita. Some day perhaps she marry, then Maria an' Luis marry also, eef she is marry the good man who take care of her. But—eef any man try to harm the senorita, I Luis Padilla, who keel the puma, I am still strong an' I still hav' this knife!"

Once more he half drew the steel from the sheath and thrust it back. Then he caught the horn of the saddle with one hand, twisted the fingers of the other in the mane of the mustang, set foot in stirrup and, as the brute swung in a plunging half-circle, held himself close-pressed to its withers before, with a lithe move, he made the saddle.

"We mus' go along," he said. "The senor mus' not lose his train."

Those were the last words he spoke until they reached the station a few minutes before the train pulled in. He waited until Caleb mounted the platform, then, with an "Adios, senor," was gone, mastering the curvetting mustang and leading El Don.

Caleb, in the smoker, concluded at last that the Mexican's fidelity, tinged perhaps, by some injury in the fight from which he had never recovered, some slight lesion in his brain from the strain and excitement, had made him a monomaniac concerning the safety of his young mistress. He possessed a jealousy that he shared with Maria. It was an obsession with both of them.

"I'd hate to be the man who had Luis Padilla on his track," he told himself, wondering if the ample Maria would also be transformed into a whirlwind of avenging fury. Here was a sample of the wilder West. It was a far cry to New England. Somehow the experience did not strike him as altogether incongruous, far-fetched.

And he had learned the age of Betty Clinton.

CHAPTER III

Cox

Hold up your right hand, with the thumb and forefinger well apart. Do the same with your left and bring it up above your right, so that the tips of the forefingers join, but those of the thumb are a little apart. The oval gap represents the great bay of Golden, a mighty harbor, deep enough for all the navies of the world to swim in, a noble anchorage for commerce, dotted here and there with islands. Far to the northeast, near the knuckle of your left forefinger, a river flows in, tapping two mighty valleys, too far away to serve Golden with water.

Opposite Golden, across the narrow strait where bay meets sea, looms the great mount of Sereno, covered with redwoods that extend back of it, up to the northern boundary of the state, a region, half exploited, of great beauty, vast logging prospects, partly developed, of small, rich valleys.

Looking to the sea, to Sereno, across the bay to the mainland, Golden queens it over an unsurpassed panorama. On Semaphore hill, where ships were signaled in the earlier days, Caleb Warner shared the apartment of Ted Baxter, on the top floor of an ambitious apartment building.

Caleb, with none too large a capital, would have chosen a less expensive, less pretentious dwelling, but he had come there first as a guest of Baxter and now they divided two bedrooms, a bathroom and a tiny sitting room, at equal expense. In the old Columbian days the two had become fast friends. It had been to a large extent the attraction of opposites. Caleb, studying with enthusiasm, taking his games seriously. Baxter, handsome, irresponsible, generous, blessed with an array of superficial qualities that made him a universal favorite. And with a tendency to dissipation that Caleb fancied he had somewhat checked.

But that was years ago and he found Baxter fairly embarked upon the pastime of spending all the money he could get hold of in the pursuit of amusement—"getting all the fun he could out of life"—he styled it. Caleb fancied he inherited this facility from his mother, a widow who spent her time at fashionable resorts, West and East, as fashion demanded, who tried to forget her age and who let her son, to a great extent, travel his own path while she followed hers. Mrs. Baxter held the command of the Baxter estate. She made her son a fairly liberal allowance but kept the larger portion for herself. Ultimately, it seemed, it would come to Baxter, if his mother remained unmarried.

The two met perhaps four times a year, all told, for brief acquaintanceship. The relationship between them seemed annulled. Mrs. Baxter drew the line at having her son appear at the fashionable resorts where she was stopping. That was a tacit understanding between them. Doubtless the widow objected to having a twenty-six-year-old child inject himself into her realm of arrested maturity. She had deliberately set back her clock of life. The presence of Ted corrected Time with too obvious a hand.

Caleb reached the apartment a little after noon and found his friend still in bed. Baxter surveyed him with a grin that turned into a yawn.

"Nice time for you to be coming home," he challenged. "Where's your New England conscience? Stopping out all night! Give an account of yourself, you reprobate. Never preach to me again. You're degenerating, Cal, my son. Have a gin fizz? I was out to the Beach last night. With a peach. With two peaches, in fact, and another caballero. The party gathers again this evening and I'm flat. What time is it? I think I'll get up. We'll have lunch at the club. Cox is in town. The man I've wanted you to meet. One of the Big Siege Guns of the coast."

Baxter regaled Caleb with an account of the trip of the night before along the beach, visiting every boulevard resort. The "peach," it appeared, was a blond stenographer who was a "thoroughbred sport and a winner." By which Caleb tacitly understood that the young lady had acquiesced in every suggestion of Baxter's without demur. Caleb broke the tale to make his own change of clothes, to shave and take his bath. Baxter ordered luncheon at the club over the telephone, to be ready in half an hour, then switched to the garage for his car to be brought round in twenty minutes.

While they waited he rounded on Caleb and demanded a statement of what he had been up to.

Caleb told his story. He saw no reason why he should conceal anything and yet he had some reluctance to describe his visit at El Nido in detail. He did not fancy that Baxter would see—or would have seen—the place and its people in the same light that he did. His reservations betrayed him. Baxter seized upon the mention of the girl with a whoop and quizzed him to the limit.

"You sly fox," he cried. "A beauty with chestnut tresses, riding like a centaur after borzois, chasing a coyote—and catching Caleb Warner! She has you on the hip, Caleb. Romance has blossomed in your sterile Massachusetts soul. Sir Galahad and the Princess of the Hidden Valley! It's a moving picture.

"I've heard of the Clintons," he rattled on. "Seen the girl, too, at the dog show, though I don't remember the chestnut locks. Next time you go a-fishing, my wandering gallant, I go with you."

"Here's your car," said Caleb dryly, looking out of the window.

Baxter gave him a bantering look and dropped the subject.

The club known as The Altruists is situated downtown, an institution grown from an early membership of writers and artists, with two big rooms and free-and-easy privileges, to affluence and influence.

It was full of good-natured men sharing a camaraderie that was new to Caleb's conception of club life. And with them all Baxter was hail-fellow-well-met. A dining-room steward sought him out and informed him that lunch would be on the table in ten minutes.

"We'll look around a bit," said Baxter. "And I must get you a card. Later we'll have you up for membership." He led the way to a great room with a gilded ceiling and many tables and cozy corners beneath it. The walls were covered with cartoons drawn by the artists of the club, commemorating past and current events, caricaturing the bright lights among them. Baxter nodded to every one in the room, it seemed, and it was well filled. There was a general air of badinage, the members reminded Caleb of grown-up boys in recess from school.

They worked their way through to a lounge for cigarettes and Baxter pointed out celebrities.

Padilla's story indicates that he is an unknown quantity to be reckoned with. What sort of factor is Baxter?

Famous "Flat Arch" in Church of St. Domingo

One of the objects which attracts the visitor in Panama is the "flat arch" in the ruins of the church of San Domingo. The edifice itself was built by Dominican monks in the palmy days of Spain's power. According to tradition, when the supports were removed from one of the chief archways it tumbled to the ground. Another was built in its place, but it too fell. The experiment was repeated the third time with a similar result.

At last an old monk, who was not supposed to know anything about architecture or engineering, had a dream in which was presented to him a plan for constructing an arch which would stand, relates a writer in Pathfinder Magazine. A structure was built according to the plan thus evolved. The arch was almost flat and made of ordinary brick. Everybody in Panama—with one exception—expected to see this arch fall as the others had done. But the old monk who had conceived it had faith in his dream. When the supports were removed he stood under the arch with folded arms. It did not fall, and it never has fallen, for to this day it stands there amid the ruins of the church in a wonderful state of preservation.

Pigeons Long Popular

For thousands of years pigeons have been favorite birds with the people of many countries and in many climes, and the popularity is as great today, or greater, as in any other period of which history speaks. Rameses III loved pigeons, donated some of the finest for use in the temple of Thebes, and Pliny told in his writings of birds selling for sums that would be about $75 in money of today. He thought that price rather high, but pigeons have sold in this country within the last year for $1,300. Pigeon racing is the popular sport of Belgium.—Ohio State Journal.

"Bore Waves"

A high tidal wave, or succession of two or three, rushing up a narrow estuary or tidal river, as at change of tide is called a bore wave. They occur in places where the tides rise and fall a considerable number of feet, as in the Bay of Fundy and various river in Europe and other parts of the world As the tide advances the water is suddenly thrown in as if in a mass, and then pursues its course up the estuary or river and in opposition to the current, presenting a volume of water moving with great rapidity and resistless force and with a height varying from two to three feet to more than twelve feet. In the case of the Tsien-Tangkiang the bore is said to have a rise of twenty feet and to advance with a loud roar at the rate of ten miles an hour.

Not Verse

"I should like to see any kind of a man, distinguishable from a gorilla, that some good and even only pretty woman could not shape a husband out of." — Holmes' "Professor at the Breakfast Table."

POULTRY

GROWING CHICKS NEED CLEAN PEN

Costs of poultry production can be lowered by raising big hatches just as the cost of pork production can be reduced by the raising of big litters. Heavy mortality among chicks can often be prevented by timely observation and care.

By the time they are a week old the chicks should be allowed, in the ordinary season, to run out doors. Confine them in small yards at first or until they learn where the heat is to be found and they will go in and out of the brooder house freely. In the early spring the yard should be inclosed in muslin-covered frames which later can be supplanted by poultry netting or lath. As the chick grow, the yard should be enlarged sufficiently to keep them on green grass. Once put on free range, there is likely to be difficulty in feeding the chicks unless they are kept apart from the hens. The same difficulty arises when chicks of different ages are being raised close together. To avoid interference by the older chicks or hens, the younger ones should be fed in small movable pens, says N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist at University farm at St. Paul. The sides of the pens may be made of lath placed so that the lower strip is high enough to permit the entrance of the smaller chicks, but low enough to keep out the larger ones.

Pullets will grow more rapidly if separated from the cockerels when about eight weeks old. Cockerels that are to be sold as broilers should have the run of a small green yard while being prepared for market.

Open Type of Equipment Useful for the Chicks

There are two good reasons why some open type of equipment is useful in raising young chickens. They are: Need for more room than is supplied by the regular equipment and need for a house that can be thoroughly ventilated in hot weather.

A house can be cheaply constructed that will be of material help in successfully growing out young chickens. For a small flock this can be made six feet square and a board roof extending from six inches to a foot over the inclosure. The framework of the house may be made of 2 by 2-inch pieces if they are well braced. Two-inch wire mesh is satisfactory for the walls. No floor is necessary, as the house can easily be moved.

On a small house the side walls do not need to be over two and one-half feet high, which will make it somewhat higher in the center. Low roosts should be provided so the chicks may be comfortable and be off of the ground.

After the warm weather comes the protection which the chickens need is from storms and rodents and other pests which bother mostly at night.

Transmit Tuberculosis From Poultry to Stock

Some thought should be given by poultry raisers, particularly in the dairy districts of northern Illinois, to the probability of finding tuberculosis in their poultry flock. It has been definitely proved, as described in the Orange Judd Illinois Farmer, that tuberculosis may be transmitted from poultry to other live stock or from other live stock to poultry.

If chickens show distinct white spots on the liver it is safe to be very suspicious that they have tuberculosis In case of any question on matters of this kind it is possible to send specimens to the state universities and arrange to have technical examination made.

Mash Brings Forth Eggs

It's the mash that is going to influence the egg yield, yet if hens have their choice of grain or mash, they may slight the mash. By giving them a light feed of grain in the morning, their hunger will drive them to the mash hopper and hence to the nests. One hundred hens should consume 12 to 15 pounds of scratch grain daily, two-thirds of which should be given them at the night feeding. Let the fowls go to roost with a full crop.

Feed for Ducklings

Equal measures of rolled oats and bread crumbs, with a sprinkling of about 3 per cent sand, will make a good starting feed for incubator-hatched ducklings. This can be fed three times per day until the fourth day, when a mash composed of equal parts of rolled oats, bread crumbs, bran and corn meal will produce good results. A mash recommended after the first week consists of three parts bran, one part low-grade flour, and one part corn meal.

How to Handle Roup

Roup in chicks is successfully handled as follows: Remove all ailing birds from the rest, to check the spread of the disease. If over-crowded in houses, relieve the condition, giving the light varieties like the Leghorns three and a half square feet of floor space per bird and the heavier varieties four square feet. Provide good ventilation without direct drafts. Wash the eyes and nostrils with 3 per cent boric acid solution, afterwards greasing the head.

All Milk Is Good

Recent trials at the University of Illinois on various forms of milk for poultry indicate that fresh milk, sour milk, buttermilk, condensed buttermilk, and powdered buttermilk are all valuable and all help to make excellent growth. The question of which of these to use depends largely on the cost and availability. The addition of some form of milk to the ration is found one of the best things to induce rapid growth and keep the birds in vigorous condition.

Way Animals Do

Mother had taken her small daughter, Edith, to a store to buy her a coat. As this was one of her first shopping trips, she seemed interested in everything the saleslady said, especially when she was told that she should shake the fur collars and cuffs downward like the animals do.

A few minutes later Edith began scratching her face. Her mother said, "Don't do that; it doesn't look well."

"But, mother, that's the way the animals do," was the quick reply.

First Floor, Please

A clerk who has charge of the garden implement department in a downtown store was approached the other day by a customer, who asked whether he had corn knives for sale.

"Yes, ma'am, just a moment, please," replied the clerk, who returned shortly with a large evil-looking blade which he assured her had a keen, dependable edge.

His customer looked somewhat startled. "My goodness," she exclaimed, "how can I trim my corns with that battle ax?"

"Wrong department. First floor, please."—Indianapolis News.

Pup Worth Owning

Automobilists passing through a town near New Orleans were perturbed when they saw a tiny dog run toward the car, heard his barks and then looked back to see the animal lying at the side of the road and a small boy bending over him. The car backed and the tourists, told by the youngster that the dog would probably die, gave him a dollar and continued on their way. At a filling station a mile or so farther on they learned something of interest. "That dog's trained to play dead whenever he runs close to an automobile," the filling station attendant told them, "an' I bet that boy has collected twenty dollar bills from people who have thought the dog was killed."

Mistaken Identity

Sir Walter Raleigh, formerly professor of English at Oxford university, whose book of delightful "Letters" is something not to be missed, loved to tell this story:

"It was at Cleveland, Ohio, that a local reporter met the train on which I arrived from New York. Not knowing me, he looked around for some one answering his conception of an Englishman. Having selected a victim—an American, by the way, who had never heard of me—the scribe stopped him and said: 'Are you Sir Walter Raleigh?' With a pitying look, the stranger replied: 'No, you'll find Sir Walter Raleigh in the club car playing poker with Queen Elizabeth!' It is only fair to the reporter to state that he later ran me to earth and told me the story."—Exchange.

The Pioneer Ohio High school band furnished music.

A Father's Day sermon was delivered at the church Sunday evening to fair sized audience by Rev. Scott. Some disappointment was felt because the Horton chorus which recently disbanded was unable to be present. The pastor handed out several compliments to fathers because of their sacrifices for their children but from the standpoint of religion he asserted that many fathers were neglecting to take the part of "leaders" with their children but were acting the part of "pushers" instead, Mr. Scott seems to agree with Judge Linsday in this respect for the Judge says that the grown ups are mostly responsible for whatever crimes or wrong conduct young people may engage in and from the viewpoint of the law, Mr. Linsday is the highest authority on young people in America. Numbering his acquaintances at something like one hundred thousand a large percentage of the number being students of high school age.

as well from a due regard to preserve the flesh uninjured, and the bones in their proper sockets, as from the danger of our weight proving too great for the frail structure, for such at least it seemed however strong it might in reality be; at any rate I have not heard since that it has given away, neither have any of the others, which we crossed in the same manner.

This was no very favorable augury for the roads of Michigan; but they were in general much better than I had expected—sometimes rough, but not dangerous; and as our carriage was sufficiently strong to bear the jolting over logs and such kind of railways, we arrived at Tecumseh in the evening, battered to be sure in a most ungentle manner, but at least with undamaged bones, but whatever amount of sore flesh, reeling of heads and excessive weariness they might have been accompanied. It was so long since I had enjoyed a night of comfortable sleep that I was almost worn out, and could scarcely sit up long enough to drink my tea; yet when I lay down, the motion of the boat (of which I still retained the feeling as when actually on board) interfered sadly with my rest and my dreams, and caused me to pass the night with almost as much discomfort, as if actually tempest-tossed.

On the next First day we attended Meeting. The road wound through quiet and beautiful openings, dotted occasionally with log dwellings and small spots of improved land; but for the most part still remaining in their own natural loveliness, crowned with scattered trees, now gathered into picturesque clumps, leaving a clear space open to the sunlight then spread out into an almost regular grove and some times giving place entirely to a small stretch of bright green prairie, contrasting finely with the rich sunlight tint of the sod on the openings, which seemed colored, as well as covered with a profusion of wild flowers and yellow "bracken." Yet beautiful as they are one of the greatest charms of these "openings" is their perfect tranquillity.

Oh, how I wish thee could breathe with me, if it were only for one short half hour, the exquisite, the religious quietness of these solitary places!—I never elsewhere felt such a stillness. There are varieties even of silence and I dare say thou hast felt it so. Contrast the hush of a starry midnight with that of a moonlit evening or of one of our religious meetings, or of an open field—and they have each their own peculiar character. But the stillness I speak of is like none of these—and must be felt in order to be understood. It was indeed almost the only thing I did feel, in attempting to describe the scenery around me, for sometime after leaving Philadelphia. There were many scenes that I saw were beautiful—most beautiful—grand picturesque, or magnificent—and I gave them my admiration and my praise; but that was all, or nearly all the sensation they could awaken. There were some spots on our route that did, indeed almost arouse a portion of my former enthusiasm; but it is of what I have witnessed since our arrival in Michigan, that I have spoken most particularly.

Hazelbank, 5th Month, 27, 1834.

"My dear Aunt;

I must write, for I should feel unwilling so far to relate the golden rule as to suffer so good an opportunity for forwarding letters to pass unimproved. But I set myself to my task almost idealess.

Well, then, if thee wishes me to go on, I will do so. We had a barn raised several weeks ago. It went up snugly and safely. There was a large number of hands, between forty and fifty all together, and if thee had happened to step in on the afternoon or morning before the raising, thee would have found aunt Ruth and I quite deeply immersed in preparation of pies, puddings and cake, such being the articles provided for refreshments We had intended putting our tables out of doors, but the afternoon was rather cool and dusty, so that we were obliged to spread them within, not for the men to sit down to, for that would have been out of the question, but to cluster around as well as they were able to obtain their supplies, retreat to another part of the room and give place to others. A clearance was soon made and our room was again left to its proper occupants. So much for a "raising" in the "back woods."

The spring, this season, has been much more than usually backward with us. Early the weather was warm, the cold spells have checked the early growth. In Ohio and Indiana we understand that some of the crops, rye especially have been much injured by the frost.

Will you not engage your supply of pork for next winter of us? We have nineteen fine young porkers about two months old. They will make fine pork in the fall.

The Lovetts have just sent word that their mother is going to leave for home tomorrow. We expected another visit from her, but she leaves sooner than she expected. So I must immediately conclude and send off my letters.

With much love, I must hastily close.

Affectionately thy niece,
E. M. Chandler."

Notice our big ad on back page entitled "Everybody Loses When Timber Burns." This is sent out by the Michigan Press Association as a warning to campers and woodsmen who are constantly setting fires by their carelessness which result in millions of dollars damage to standing timber of which we have little to lose. Michigan's splendid timber is rapidly melting away and some very long jumps must be made soon if were are to save any of it. It's too bad people care so little for one of the best natural resources the state ever had.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive however plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved thru the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few of the things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states, "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs and has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

Early Colonial Clocks

Although clocks had been made for centuries they were still a luxury at the time of the Colonies. The early settlers contented themselves with a glance at the sun which began and ended their day. The clocks they had were set upon a shelf against the wall and the long pendulum swung back and forth in a slit in the shelf. These were called "Wag-at-the-wall" clocks. It was probably to protect the pendulum that the first tall clock cases were made, says Sarah M. Lockwood in "Antiques."

"Very well," continued the other; "I am the inspector of nuisances and—"

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Reveals Prosperity of Country but Says No More Tax Reduction.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WE ALL knew the United States was prosperous, but the figures given out last week by President Coolidge in his budget address to the semi-annual meeting of the government's business organization were surprising. A surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30 was anticipated, but the President announced that it would be, in round numbers, $390,000,000—much greater than was estimated in December or March after the passage of the revised revenue act. Yet more surprising, there is in prospect a surplus of about $185,000,000 for the fiscal year 1927, and of $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1928. Up to this time Mr. Coolidge and the treasury and budget officials had been telling the people that the government would not more than break even in 1927 and that the next year would reveal a deficit.

The President said that on June 30 the gross public debt would be approximately $19,680,000,000, representing a reduction during the fiscal year of $836,193,887, which is about $100,000,000 more reduction than was made during the previous fiscal year.

Notwithstanding the prosperous condition shown by the figures submitted, the President did not relax from his stand for continual economy, and he warned the public that there was no possibility of further tax reduction at the present time. He asserted that a falling off in business activity might easily wipe out the prospective 1927 surplus, and as for 1928, he told the department heads and bureau chiefs in his audience "frankly that the outlook today is not encouraging," and that the possible surplus of $20,000,000 "is negligible and may easily be converted into a deficit."

As a new measure of economy President Coolidge proposed a reduction in pay rolls under a scheme by which $20,000,000 is to be saved during the next 12 months. The details of the plan, which were outlined by Director of the Budget H. M. Lord in an address following that of the President, call for the organization of the "2 per cent personnel club." It is not contemplated to discharge any present employees but to omit filling such number of vacancies as they occur as will result in saving at least 2 per cent of the annual salary cost.

Concerning tax reduction, the President said: "It would be unfortunate to raise hopes of further tax relief until we are sure that the state of our finances justifies it. There is no such surety today. Business was quick to anticipate the last tax reduction. It was justified in so doing. To raise such hopes at this time might be to encourage business to anticipate again, as it did in 1925, further tax reduction. This might have a detrimental effect upon the stabilization of the country under the present tax law."

AT LEAST until next session of congress the corn belt's plans for farm-relief legislation were killed when the senate defeated the McNary bill by a vote of 39 to 45. The house already had rejected the measure, which would provide for price stabilization. The Middle West had counted on the support of the cotton section, but only six southern senators voted for the bill.

NEVER before has the world seen so great a religious demonstration as was the twenty-eighth International Eucharistic congress in Chicago. Its importance and impressiveness were recognized by men of all creeds and of no creed, and the hope was expressed generally that it would stimulate a revival of spirituality in a world that has become too material. Under the leadership of church officials, from cardinals down, nearly a million devout Catholics gathered in the city by the lake and for three days participated in gigantic outdoor masses and other ceremonies in Soldiers' field and in huge meetings in the churches and other buildings. On Thursday came the culminating ceremony, the procession of the Holy Sacrament, the displaying of the Consecrated Host by Cardinal Bonzano and the final papal blessing by the pope's legate—all this at the St. Mary of the Lake seminary in the suburb of Mundelein. All Wednesday night and Thursday morning the throngs made their way to Mundelein until, when the procession started, it was estimated there were 800,000 people in the little village. While 12 cardinals sat on their thrones, the procession moved for hours, displaying all the color and ceremony of the Catholic church. Archbishops and bishops, mitred abbots and monsignori, uniformed knights of various Catholic orders, the lower orders of the clergy and the hundreds of thousands of laymen made up a spectacle that may never again be seen, at least on this side of the Atlantic.

Chicago was congratulated by the visitors on the efficiency displayed in caring for the comfort and safety of the vast throng of visitors. Incidentally, it received a lesson on the effect of nonparking orders in the loop business district that, if taken advantage of, would go far toward solving the city's serious traffic congestion problem.

SENATOR REED of Missouri has been having the time of his life since he succeeded in getting Wayne B. Wheeler before the senate committee investigating the Pennsylvania and other primaries. The wet Missourian was determined to bring out the facts concerning the political activities of the Anti-Saloon league, and up to the time of writing he had succeeded in making public a lot of interesting information. For instance, it was learned from Mr. Wheeler that from 1920 to 1925, inclusive, the National Anti-Saloon league, exclusive of the 48 state branches, raised and expended nearly $3,500,000. At the height of the fight to put through the eighteenth amendment the expenditure averaged $2,500,000 a year. It transpired, however, that the financial reports submitted by Mr. Wheeler did not show expenditures by the league in campaigns for the nomination and election of dry candidates for national, state and local offices. These campaign funds were raised and expended separately by campaign committees organized by the league. The committee called for information on those funds, on the receipts and disbursements of the 48 state leagues and on the national league's receipts and expenditures prior to 1920.

Further testimony, too much to be related in detail, was heard concerning the Pennsylvania Republican primary and the sources of campaign funds. Even the state W. C. T. U. became involved.

IF THE new French ministry which Briand has patched together stands up, Joseph Caillaux, former exile, will be the virtual boss of the country. After both Briand and Herriot had failed to get together a cabinet, Briand wanted to give up entirely, but President Doumergue insisted, so the veteran formed a ministry which he hoped would draw support from the left, center and right factions in parliament. Caillaux consented to take the finance portfolio, the most important at this time, only after being guaranteed "dictatorial powers" permitting him to have his own way in financial matters without question by any other minister. Also he was made vice premier, a position that has always been conferred on the minister of justice. Briand will continue as premier and foreign minister and will represent France in the League of Nations, and in the latter capacity he is to have a free hand. Other well-known men in the cabinet are Durand, Laval, Leygues, Vincent, Dourafour and General Guillaumat, who is minister of war. At the demand of Caillaux, Raymond Poincare and all Clemenceau adherents were kept out of the ministry.

Caillaux warns the nation that he intends to apply heroic remedies for the present distressing situation of France, and the nationalist newspapers say he is preparing a coup d'etat in which the army will support him. It is understood he will reopen the debt negotiations with the United States and try to have inserted in the accord the safeguard clause making French payments contingent on receipts of German reparations.

THOUGH strenuously opposed Marshal Pilsudski is getting his own way in Poland. The parliament, after a tumultuous session, has agreed to pass out of existence, making way for one that will be entirely subservient to the dictator.

Portugal's new dictator, Gen. Gomes da Costa, is suspected of having royalist sympathies, and the European governments are watching his movements carefully, rather expecting that he will reseat Manuel on the throne. It is recalled that some two months ago the former king sent a secret circular to leading royalists in Portugal, pointing out that the parliamentary government in Portugal had broken down. He suggested that the only way to save the country, in his opinion, was through the establishment of a military dictatorship, with the restoration of the monarchy to follow.

ALTHOUGH 14,890,000 Germans voted in favor of the expropriation of the property of the former kaiser, other princely rulers and their families, which property is valued at $600,000,000, the proposition was beaten in the national referendum. Under the law, 19,500,000 votes were required to order the confiscation, and the great majority of the voters stayed away from the polls, holding that the private property of the princes should be returned to them. This was the view of President von Hindenburg and the government. More potent still in guiding the people was the belief that the confiscation would be the first step in the Bolshevizing of Germany, to be followed by the taking of the property of all the bourgeois if the Communists had their way—which was the prediction of Leon Trotzky, the Russian Bolshevik leader.

For eight years the German governments have been dickering with the princes concerning their revenues and Chancellor Marx warned the leaders of the various parties that he would present a compromise settlement that they must accept or he would dissolve the reichstag. His plan provides for only partial restoration of the royal properties. The Socialists said they would agree if the princes were granted not more than 15 per cent of their prewar incomes.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER RICHARD BYRD and Floyd Bennett, the American navy men who were the first to fly across the top of the world and drop the flag at the North pole, have returned to the United States and were given an enthusiastic welcome. After landing at New York, where they were acclaimed by cheering thousands, the bold aviators went to Washington. There President Coolidge, cabinet members, the Supreme court, congress, army and navy officers and diplomats united in doing them honor. To Byrd was presented the rarely given Hubbard medal of the National Geographic society, and to Bennett a medal especially designed for the occasion. Next day the flyers went to Virginia, Byrd's native state and where his brother is governor. In Richmond they were the guests of honor at a huge reception.

LOS ANGELES' latest mystery, the disappearance on May 18 of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, well-known evangelist, has been partly solved, for she was found last week in the Mexican town of Agua Prieta by an American and taken to a hospital in Douglas, Ariz. She told a long story of having been kidnaped by two men and a woman, all Americans, and taken into Mexico where she was held for ransom. After being moved about from place to place, she said, she escaped when her captors were absent and wandered all night on the desert. Mexican and American posses searching for the abductors have not been able to find the house from which the woman says she escaped, and the sheriff at Douglas says her clothing and shoes show no evidence of having come through the rough wastes in which she asserts she wandered all night. The district attorney at Los Angeles started an investigation of the case, including peculiar circumstances of the reward for the evangelist's return, which was offered and later withdrawn. So, at the time of writing, the mystery is only partly solved.

Freed Banker to Give Life to Welfare Work

Philadelphia.—Free, after serving a little more than three years in the eastern Pennsylvania prison for killing three persons with his automobile, Henry G. Brock, Philadelphia banker, was resting at the home of friends preparatory to taking up prison welfare work, to which he said the remainder of his life would be devoted. It was partly due to his work among the convicts and his purpose to continue this work that he owes his freedom.

Sentenced in April, 1923, to serve six to ten years after pleading to second degree murder, he was pardoned by Governor Pinchot on recommendation of the state board of pardons.

The board took official cognizance of "his manly acceptance of the consequences of his act, the work he has done for prisoners and his purpose to continue this work." Brock was a model prisoner and did much prison welfare work at his own expense.

Brock, admittedly befuddled with ale, was driving his big motor car at a rapid pace when he struck two women and a man who were alighting from a trolley car on March 2, 1923. He had no recollection, he said afterward, at his trial, of what had occurred. He refused to make a defense, saying he could do nothing that would restore the lives he had taken and that he wanted to submit to the law. He was thirty-seven years old when sentenced to prison.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"The Glorious Fourth"

When cannons are booming loud
They take their crackers and light their punk. And smoke goes up in a cloud. Sisst—boom—hurrah for the Fourth. The "Glorious Fourth" of July e-y-e. Off with torpedoes and crackers and guns, And colored balloons in the sky." This is what the children of twenty five years ago used to sing, with a very prolonged "eye" on the last syllable of July!

We do not now teach our boys and girls about "torpedoes and guns," and the Fourth is supposed to be "safe and sane". But Americans are most enthusiastic when they can make a noise, so that part of the celebration may always be with us. Time was when the day was an occasion for some so-called patriotic citizens to get "noisy drunk," and the clang of the patrol wagon added to the din.

Independence Day will always be dear to the heart of every true American, to whom it stands as a reminder of struggle, victory and freedom hard earned. But the independence gained by declaration in 1776, and which gave us our freedom and a "place in the sun," was small in influence compared with that of the new declaration of independence that would free us from the tyranny of traitors and law violators in 1926.

Patriotism means more than doffing the hat as the flag goes by, more than singing the "Star Spangled Banner," more than firing off rockets and parading. Yet all these might be legitimate part of a demonstration if they were used only as a background to emphasize law observance and law enforcement.

Most communities "celebrate" in some way, so why not concentrate on a "Law Observance" rally at the ball-park or the picnic ground "The early morn" is a good time to start, as it is cool then. The big drum-major (or the little drum-major) leads the band and all the folks with their picnic baskets fall in behind. The previously arranged program includes a representative from the Rotary Club, the Kiwanis Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the churches, the schools, and of course the mayor or the burgess (or whatever he is), and anybody else who ought to be included.

Everybody sings from "Everybody Sing" and the speaker is the finest one hundred percent American the community can produce. He might be a political aspirant or one who already serves his country in state or national capacity. Anyway, it's bound to be a "great speech."

Hungry time means "eats." The cold chicken, the hard-boiled eggs the pickled beets, the sandwiches, the pie and the three-story cake with tiny flags stuck in the icing, are all wonderful!

After the lunch is cleared away, in which act everybody has a part, then comes the afternoon program. Maybe it is a flag raising, when everybody pledges allegiance in a salute, as with hand over heart the words are reverently said: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America," followed by the first and fourth verses of "America," which last is a prayer.

The next section of the program is for the children and there need be no limitation to its attractiveness through play, pageant, pantomine, poster parade, song and story, with lots of color (but no misuse of the flag) and plenty of "peppy" tunes.

It's about time a little later for the ice-cream treat. This is served now on little paper saucers with spoons, and there is no dishwashing.

The honking of automobiles means that some are preparing to go home, but nearly all stay for supper and an early evening program. This includes a concert by the band and some beautiful life-pictures by the young people of the community. A great gilded frame in a draped back ground is the only stage setting needed for this, and the "pictures" themselves

"The Spirit of 1776"
"Betsy Ross making the flag"
"Washington at Valley Forge"
The Surrender of Yorktown"
Portrait of "Martha Washington"
Colonial Dames at Tea

Other episodes taken from early American history also lend attractiveness through form, color and clothing. Correct music for the "pictures" and during the intervals is most essential.

The reading of the Declaration of Independence and singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" should be included somewhere in the program. And in your day plans do not forget "the children" and the colored balloons in the sky" which must have something printed on them, perhaps "No Law Breaker a Law Maker" or "Support the Constitution—Serve America."

Now it is the end of a "perfect day", a safe, sane, happy celebration of a great event. But a greater day is coming when law shall reign when alcohol shall be forever banished, when Christian America shall be the example for other nations to follow and all the world shall throw off the shackles of the liquor traffic.—The Union Signal.

Politics at Lansing as Usual

It ought not to surprise our readers to know that politics in Michigan as usual are regulated at Lansing, and although a whole passel of political twisters are up in arms because we have the excellent Primary election law and want to repeal it—their headway is mostly backwards to date. The gang in Lansing who would essay to boss our politics are beginning to realize that the Primary Election law was not put on the statute books for a parody or a joke, but is there because the honest voters of this state want it there: they want to know what they are doing and how They will see to it that candidates who should have office are put up. They will scandalize every rotten spell binder who wants to make us believe he is the man when everybody knows he is not the man. His record should be known from Hillsdale to Dollar Bay. Of course we don't believe there is anything gained by digging up old dead and buried offenses against a candidate, and the eleventh hour reactionaries are usually hoisted by their own petard.

Take for instance the gubernational imbroglio. Mayor Fred Green of Ionia, a well known and respected politician; has been in the game for several years in his own county under his local fig tree Fred has held considerable influence up in his county, and no doubt is a good man. "Smilin' through" isn't going to land the big plum for him. His broad expanse of ivories are like a summer's day at Palm Beach. Everybody likes a good natured fat man, but its no sign they are going to turn down a tried and found efficient executive who has built more roads than any living man. We'd like to see Fred get a chance to spread his infantile political wings and soar until he was well aloft, but he'll have to get in on some other contest than the governorship.

Of course Fred must have something to talk on so he attacks the one-man government and Czardom; he thinks or pretends to, that there is too much pandering to certain Detroit interests which may be true. It is generally conceded that Governor Groesbeck lends an ear to Detroit often, and so would any other executive be obliged to do. Detroit is a big nasty blotch on the map of Michigan, but when you consider there are as many people who are voters in Detroit as there are in four populous counties it means they are entitled to a voice. To be sure some of them are scaly citizens; some are crooks some are whited sepulcres, but you can't help it. No, we believe that another term or two won't hurt Groesbeck and it'll help Michigan, which is not saying we won't take Green's or any other man's advertising at stipulated rates and give him our best location,

Michigan Sunday School Council of Religious Education

The only official interdenominational school for the training of Sunday school teachers is being held at Camp Warren, near Benton Harbor, July 5th to 16th this year. The School is a Standard School, offering only Standard Courses leading toward the Internationally recognized Training Diploma. It is under the auspices of the Michigan Council of Religious Education and the Berrien County Sunday School Association Rev. E. W. Halpenny of Lansing is the Dean.

Instructors for the year are; Dr. Albertus Pieters of Hope College Holland; Miss Irene Rockenbach, Rev. Fred A. Replogle and Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Halpenny of Lansing; A. R Arford and Mrs. Fred Washburn of Benton Harbor and Rev. J. C. Nelson of Berrien Springs.

Tuition for the ten day period is only $2.00. Board and cottage may be had at $15.00. Students are required to do two hours of study, and three hours of classroom work each day. The remainder of the time is taken up in recreation, rest and evening programs.

Sunday school workers desiring to make their vacation really restful and at the same time do some classroom work in the earlier and cooler hours of the day, will find the School at Camp Warren both economical and practical.

Inquiries are being received daily. They should be addressed to the Dean—Rev. E. W. Halpenny, Box 187, Lansing, Mich.

Seven thousand pounds more pork from 10 litters of pigs represents the difference between raising pigs the ordinary way and raising them under the swine sanitation system devised by the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, according to the experience of one Iowa farmer. He reports that he raised one lot of pigs from four sows under the conditions that had prevailed in the past on his farm. For comparison, he raised another lot from six sows under the system of swine sanitation, which prevents roundworms and related diseases and ailments. The first lot of sows farrowed 35 pigs, of which 19 survived and weighed 35 pounds each at the end of October, 1925. The second lot farrowed 41 pigs of which 40 survived, one being killed by accident; the 40 pigs weighed 130 pounds each at the end of October.

Reduced to pounds of pork the results show that the four sows kept under ordinary conditions produced 665 pounds of pork, or 166 pounds per sow. The six sows kept under sanitary conditions produced, on the other hand, 5,200 pounds of pork, an average of 866 pounds per sow. Thus one sow under sanitary conditions produced 700 pounds more pork than a similar sow handled in the ordinary manner. For 10 sows this would mean

Building Up Markets

THE constituent lines of the Michigan Railroad Association will expend nearly $25,000,000 this year for additions and betterments to the respective properties. These outlays will provide for greater safe-guards to human life, more comfort for the traveling public, increased facilities and better freight service.

Michigan Railroads may justly claim more than their modest slogan—We Serve Michigan. They have contributed to the upbuilding of the industries of the Commonwealth, as perhaps no other group of rail lines in America has done. Two decades of tremendous industrial expansion justified this far-sighted policy of the railroads.

In encouraging industrial up-building, the railroads have also, in a measure, created a Home Market that absorbs the bulk of the products of our farms, orchards, gardens, etc., right at home. So true is this that with increased production, the railroads are annually hauling farm commodities less and less. All of these—except the hay crop—are consumed at home.

THIS tremendous Home Market is the ideal market. But the expansion policy means more. It has created an outlet for similar products grown in other states. The track market at Detroit, for instance, handles 40 different perishable commodities from the cars direct to the dealers—a single transfer only. To illustrate: Fresh tomatoes are found at the green grocers for seven months in the year, thanks to expedited service and the refrigerator car. Shipments are made from Old Mexico and five southern states before the Michigan crop has matured. This is so for the entire list of fruits and vegetables.

With our present railroad system the average wage earner of today enjoys a far wider range of delicacies on his table the year round than did the Kings and Nobles of Europe of a century or more ago.

THE Michigan Railroad Association, then, takes justifiable pride in announcing its program of improvements and betterments for the current year which will further aid the state's industrial advancement, give even greater importance to the Home Market, and contribute still more towards raising the standard of living of all the people.

Letters From A Lenawee Log Cabin

Hazelbank, 3d, Mo. 27th 1832.
My dear Aunt:

I am glad that thee intends writing the next letter to me, for I have been bragging for sometime past that I got the longest ones, and I hope a full sheet will bear me out in my boast. We received thy last letter to brother last evening and with it the mulberry seeds and newspapers, mailed at the same time—just ten days from the time of their leaving Philadelphia. I am very much obliged to thee for the trouble thee has had in procuring my mulberry seeds, it is quite time enough to plant them, and I hope thee will see them next summer flourishing finely, and that I may in the course of two or three years, have the pleasure of furnishing thee with a pair of silk stockings of my own raising and manufacture.

Spring work has now fairly set in, brother expects tommorrow breaking up in a field that he has fenced this spring, when he intends planting corn, and perhaps, oats. He does dearly love the business of farming, and seems very happy in his situation which he often contrasts with his former situation in Philadelphia.

The ground on the openings is covered with a tough sod, and requires for the first ploughing, three or four yoke of cattle to break it up, with two hands: one to drive the oxen and the other to guide the plough. The voice of the driver is in almost constant requisition; so much so that it made brother when he first commenced last spring, several times quite hoarse. We were quite amused at first with watching the process. In this kind of work T. goes on the principle of exchange with his neighbors, both for cattle and assistance.

In doors, we have been pretty busy making candles. Aunt Ruth has been the principal in the manufacture. She has dipped all of them near two hundred in number; enough to last a long time.

Aunt Ruth often says she can fancy uncle and thee talking about us of an evening, but though we have told you a great deal about Hazelbank, I do not expect you can tell quite as well how to place us or to fancy how, we are placed as we can you.

Almost every spring and frequently in the fall some part of the openings is burnt over by fire communicated to them from burning brush heaps, and sometimes other causes. The fire has never yet run very near us, or so near as to get upon our ground, but we did not know at one time last Seventh day evening whether we should not have had a visit from it, in which case it might perhaps have made brother some trouble in pulling down part of the fencing in order to protect it. There was a bright glare of light along the sky north of us from dusk till ten or eleven o'clock, when it gradually disappeared. The blaze and red wreaths of smoke were perceptible, but though the wind was high it blew directly from the south and kept the fire back from us, and the road besides lay between as a bar to its progress.

29th. Brother T. has just been to the land office for his lot, and before I write again and thee receives my present letter, I suppose he will be in possession of it. Besides being very valuable to him on account of its timber, it contains some very fine and valuable bottom ground or flats, which will make an excellent meadow with but little trouble and is much better suited to grass than the openings.

The sky has, for several evenings past been brightly illumined in various directions by the fires on the openings, which I mentioned above and on Seventh day evening and First day a general conflagration took place around us. We had for a week warm and dry weather and the ground by the aid of what the sailors call a pretty stiff breeze was burnt over in fine style. On Seventh day afternoon, brother went to a raising in the neighborhood. We thought the openings were on fire from the smoky appearance of the air, and the night previous it was evident they were so, though we supposed it was on the other side of the river. Towards the latter part of the afternoon, sooner than we expected him, I saw brother hastily cross the yard and prepare to yoke up his cattle. We knew there was something unexpected, and on inquiry we learned that the openings were on fire east of us; that the fire was advancing and that all our neighbors in that direction had resolved to burn off the ground about their homes, in order to prevent its coming on them in the night. Thomas did not know whether he should burn or not as it was probable that the fire would not cross the road. He had been over to uncle Darius Comstock's to tell him of the fire that he might secure from it a young growth of timber which he highly valued. Uncle Darius was much obliged to him for the information and offer of assistance as he was quite unaware of the danger, and his own hands were absent at another raising. T. took his cattle to assist in ploughing around his trees that he might set what they call "back fires" to meet the other that was advancing. By the time it was dark, fire after fire was seen springing up, and before a great while the openings were covered with the bright sheets of blaze. The changing colors and flames, the broad flashes of blaze that would every once in a while leap up amidst the branches of the trees to feed on the withered leaves gleam out for a moment brightly amid the red smoke and vanish, The strange aspect of the trees themselves which the fire had not yet enveloped, but again, whose broad bare limbs the light gleamed through; the dark forms of the men as they passed rapidly along against the strong light, driving back the flames or touching their blazing torches to the dry bushes and lighting up a long line of fires which swept forward to meet those which were more gradually approaching from the east; all these formed a scene highly interesting thrilling in character, and entirely new to us.

About ten o'clock, brother came up again for his oxen. The fire had run across the road and they were going to plough around it and again set back fires. Shortly after this, there was an unexpected shower which lasted about three minutes; and slackened the pace of the fire. By this time it had nearly burned out opposite to us, but the remains of it looked almost like an illumined city. They then concluded it would not be necessary to burn around our house as the fire could not approach us very rapidly against the wind and might perhaps go out, without threatening our fence at all. So it was concluded that as the men were tired and hungry, not having taken time to eat their suppers, they should then go home and return again if it was necessary. Darius Jackson came back again to watch with brother, The intention of the fire seemed uncertain, as it appeared to be alternately advancing and retreating until one o'clock, when they again went out and as the rain had deadened it, decided in putting out the spots where it was burning on this side of the road; and after watching a while aunt Ruth and I continued to sleep and watch alternately.

In the morning after breakfast they went out again to reconnoiter, and returned with the intelligence that it was out, and brother and I were preparing for meeting, when the sight of smoke curling up which soon extended into a long line, altered our intentions. Brother went to look at it, found that it was advancing towards us, and went to Comstock's for assistance, for if it was suffered to run, Jackson's fence as well as our own was in danger. Uncle Darius and all his men, except one, had gone to meeting, but Darius Jackson returned with brother and after an examination they concluded to draw a furrow and made ready to burn back fires again. They did so and before they had finished, Uncle Darius and half a dozen attendants came over and on the south and east openings were soon covered with flames. It did not approach the fence at all, and by the latter part of the afternoon had burnt off within sight of us, but not so far distant as to light up the sky at night. As soon as it became dark, old burning trees were discovered, standing like huge torches about us in all directions, some of which continued burning all the next day and evening, and of whose fall we were sometimes notified by the crash attending it. It is all over now and I suppose we shall have no more very terrible fires this season.

Brother, last evening received the receipt for his lot from the land office. These receipts or duplicates, or patents as they are called are given by the land office when the money is paid in, till the proper deed can be sent for and transferred from Washington.

We are all well and with much love to all the folks.

I remain, very affectionately,
thy niece.

The rotation of crops is nearly as effective in increasing soil productivity as is the use of farm manures and complete fertilizers, as based on experimental yields of wheat, corn, and oats, taken collectively. When rotation and the use of fertilizers are practiced together the one practice adds to the benefits of the other, and increased yields are greater than from either practice alone.

A simple tatoo instrument has been devised for marking hogs as they leave the farm for the market so that they can be identified after slaughter. Such identification makes it possible to trace diseased animals to the farm where the infection originated. A tatoo mark properly applied resists all attempts to remove it. Such marks are valuable in establishing ownership of hogs in cooperative shipments as well as in combating disease.

Two hundred and sixty Michigan editors and their families, who recently enjoyed the annual summer outing of the Michigan Press Association at Harbor Springs, are agreed that section holds unusual charms and recreational features for a summer outing. Rich in everything that might lure the vacationist or summer visitor, Harbor Springs and vicinity, boasting of fine hotel facilities, beautiful drives, bathing and boating features, as well as rare Indian mythology, presents opportunities as a summer playground that are unusual, even in Michigan. The live Chamber of Commerce of Harbor Springs has done much to popularize this section, through their courteous and efficient handling of inquiries from prospective visitors.

WILBUR COX

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune.

"There's Wilbur Cox," he said. "That's a Big Business crowd. Morse, on the right of Cox, is head of the Lumber ring, then comes Towle, president of the Sundown railroad. Marlin's next, he opens up big tracts for colonist development. Lawler is an oil magnate and the last one is Winton, manager of the Golden Light and Power company. They come close to running Golden and a good share of the state as well. I don't know how their bank balances stand, but you can bet that the six of them represent several times that number of million dollars in active circulation with their interests."

Caleb regarded Cox with special attention. He knew that he owned big land holdings, controlled rich mines and was the president and mainspring of the Crystal Springs Water company that supplied Golden with its commercial and civic measure of the vital fluid.

He saw a man who might have been anywhere from fifty to sixty, tall, spare, with close-trimmed hair gray above the ears, clean-shaven, with a fine forehead and a well-shaped skull, a projecting nose, keen gray eyes, a genial mouth and a firm chin. He told many of the stories that met with the greatest laughter, for the group was a care-free one, for the moment at least. Their luncheon was almost over and, when Cox rose at its conclusion, he did so with an ease that spoke of muscles still in prime condition. If Caleb had wanted to sum up the man in one crisp word he would have chosen the adjective "fit."

"No need to hurry," Baxter said. "The old boy's son is coming up this afternoon from Los Angeles and I know Cox has arranged for a dinner here tonight. If you can get in right with Cox, Cal, the going should be easy. I can give you the introduction. After that it's up to you. Cox doesn't take me very seriously."

Leaving the dining room, they met Cox alone, coming from the direction of the club's telephone booths. Baxter seized the moment.

"I want a friend of mine to meet you," he said to the older man, speaking with the frank facility that was one of his greatest assets, met by Cox with a sort of half-tolerant geniality. "This is Caleb Warner, one-time classmate of mine at Columbia, civil engineer, following the Star of Empire westward in the hope of hitching his wagon to it. Don't let my friendship with him prejudice you against him. He plays ant to my grasshopper."

Cox smiled as he gripped Caleb's hand cordially enough, giving him a direct glance that, in kindly but determined fashion, seemed to measure him.

"Glad to meet you," he said. "Plenty of room out here for civil engineers. Any specialty?"

"Water," Caleb answered promptly. The eyes of Cox seemed to harden a little, to hold a hint of suspicion at the pat answer that might have been calculated to awaken interest.

"Done much at it?"

"A factory dam or two. One reservoir for town supply. Back East. The rest of my practical experience has been along other lines for the last two years but I am especially interested in water-engineering and the West seemed to be the place."

"Looking for a job?" Cox fired out the questions briskly, all the while covering Caleb with the battery of his eyes.

"For any real opportunity, Mr. Cox."

A servant came up with a salver and presented it to Baxter. He glanced at the filled-in form-message and excused himself.

"You'll pardon me. I'm wanted on the phone. Cox looked after him with a humorous quirk to his mouth.

"There goes the grasshopper," he said. "Now then, these last two years you mentioned? What were you doing? Where were you doing it?"

"Building roads and bridges. Requiring a lot more. Some trench work."

"Ah!" Caleb was sure that a gleam of new interest came into Cox's eyes. "You served over there. Any rank?"

"I came out a first lieutenant." Cox nodded.

"It was a great training ground," he said. "No time wasted there, to my mind. Gave a young man a broader horizon, taught him to handle men. My boy was over there." He hesitated as Baxter came back. "He's due here at five-thirty," he went on. "I imagine you'd get on well together. Better join us at dinner. You too, Baxter."

"Got to excuse me," said Baxter. "Previous appointment. Sorry."

One of the members of the luncheon party had been hovering somewhat impatiently in the background, evidently waiting for Cox. The latter saw him and nodded.

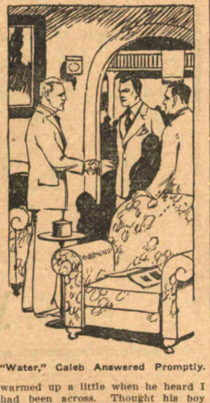
"Got to go now," he said. "See you at five-thirty, Warner, then."

Caleb watched the tall figure as it strode off, energetic, masterful, listening to what the other had to say, dismissing it with an abrupt gesture. He turned to Baxter.

"That man is a fighter," he said.

"You can double that bet. They're all fighters, scrapping for everything in sight, fighting to get it, fighting to hold on to it. That's the essence of Big Business, I take it, everywhere. They have their rules, of course, but they sometimes slip one over beneath the belt, at that. But they've never told the count over Cox. How did he come to invite you to dinner? Not to mention me? I'd fit in there about as well as a goldfish in a shark-pond—not worth gobbling but, if I glittered enough, they might know I was among those present."

"I don't think he took any sudden fancy to me," Caleb answered. "He warmed up a little when he heard I had been across. Thought his boy might like to meet me."



"Water," Caleb Answered Promptly.

"Of course. I'm a chump. Jack Cox is the apple of his father's eye, all the more so because Pa Cox had good reasons to suppose said apple was worm-eaten. You think I'm inclined to burn the trail: Man, beside Jack Cox I was as a Ford to a Rolls Royce! He was in more mix-ups with wine, women and song than Don Juan ever dreamed of. Compared to him I'm an amateur. Or was. The war changed all that. Jack's come back a changed leopard. Not a spot on him. Following in his dad's footsteps." He broke off abruptly. "How about a little air this afternoon? I think the breeze would favor my fevered brow. I want to be fit for tonight. We'll take the car over on the ferry and run down to San Jose and back."

"Just the two of us?"

"Yes, you double-dyed Puritan, just the two of us, all by our lonelies. Are you on?"

At three o'clock they were bowling south along an almost perfect road when Baxter grudgingly slowed down in obedience to a signboard that informed them they were approaching the town of Paloma.

"I'm feeling much better," he announced. "Want to take the wheel for a while and let me smoke?" They changed seats.

"I've got to trim down on these," Baxter said, lighting his cigarette. "The pump needs repacking," he went on, tapping himself over the heart. "And it can't be done. They turned me down for that. Told me I had a banquet-heart and that the excitement of sticking a Heine might end it. It's the old C and C. Champagne and cigarettes! Jack Cox got in but I stayed out. Made me feel like a slacker."

"Why don't you cut the stuff, Ted?"

"It isn't going to last long enough. At present I prefer the vineyard to the lemon grove. I'm no good at business anyway. I'm a grasshopper and I'll hop till the grass gets too short and things dry up generally."

"This sort of thing you've got on tonight, Ted? Aren't you afraid you'll wind up in some sort of a mess?"

"I'm immune. It's good fun. The girls I travel with know how to take care of themselves. It's a two-sided game. If I met the right girl— Oh, what's the use? You see, Cal, the mater is chipping off a chunk of her principal every year. She flies high herself. If I outlast her, which is doubtful, there won't be much coming to me. I suppose she's right. I've got to marry money, but the girls with money are either too blase, too businesslike or too homely and stupid. No use preaching to me, Cal. You're born an ant and I'm a cicada, which is Californese for grasshopper."

They reached the apartment house at five o'clock and Caleb proceeded to dress circumspectly for the dinner while his friend laid out more sumptuous raiment.

"You'll be home tonight?" asked Caleb.

"I'll be home when the game's over," answered Baxter enigmatically. "This is Saturday night. We may take a little trip to Lake county. Don't bother about me. Off to your business, ant!"

CHAPTER IV

Big Business

Jack Cox turned out so close a replica of his father—less weathered, less bitten by Time and Experience—but nevertheless so evident a chip of the old block, that Caleb almost doubted Baxter's description of him as a reformed wastrel. He had been through the furnace of the war and, whatever of steel had been in him had been tempered, the baser metals burned to slag and discarded. Caleb had seen others in his own division of the fighting game who had stiffened and found their manhood in like fashion.

Caleb liked him from the outset. The man had qualities that he lacked, the same western broadness that Baxter possessed in more volatile fashion. But, though trolleys and water dams seem far apart to the laity, a mutual profession based both of them. Caleb found the preliminary story of Imperial valley vastly interesting and Jack Cox told it well, albeit he had had no hand in those earlier stages of development. It was the tale of the bringing back of an arid sink, once under cultivation by the Indians, of the harnessing of the mighty Colorado, one terrific fight with flood waters and now—cotton fields, and vineyards, wide acres of cantaloupes, horticulture and agriculture in every branch; order, industry, prosperity. Caleb listened with interest and understanding.

"There is only one Imperial valley, perhaps," said Cox, "but there are other deserts with soil just as fertile, waiting only for the magic touch of water. Your end of it—the water end—is the initial move in the game, mine is the last. You play Alpha to my Omega."

"If I get the chance," said Caleb.

"Oh, you'll get it. The chances are everywhere. If a man knows his business, and wants to work at it, there's no trouble about Opportunity. Her knuckles must be raw on the Pacific coast. She knocks unceasingly," laughed Cox.

The Coxes' father and son, appear to be solid folk. Is Caleb Warner's lot to be cast with them?

Old-Time Press Censor of Reactionary Mind

The first Englishman of any distinction to take up journalism as a profession was Sir Roger l'Estrange, who died 221 years ago.

He was an ardent pamphleteer on the epoch of the Restoration, and in 1662 was made "surveyor of the press," the censor of all books and pamphlets and the editor of a monopolistic newspaper, called the Intelligencer.

The reactionaries and die-hards of today would certainly welcome Sir Roger with open arms, for he wrote that the publication of any but the most carefully edited news "makes the multitude too familiar with the actions and counsels of their superiors, too pragmatical and censorious, and gives them not only a wish, but a kind of a colorable light and license to the meddling with the government."

He failed miserably in his attempt to stamp out the freedom of the press—or its early ideal—and when deprived of his monopoly, he himself turned to the publication of an unofficial "catchpenny" sheet, called the Observer.—Chicago Journal.

Had Benefit of Climate

The homes of the ancient Romans were imperishable because they were erected in a climate wherein there was practically no freezing and thawing. The same mortars used in our climate have not been at all successful. Furthermore, the same stones used by the Romans give a comparatively short life in our country. The mortar mostly used by the Romans was a mixture of lime and sand. To this was added some natural occurring ground volcanic rock. This corresponds to what is known as puzzolana, which, as indicated, has not been found satisfactory here.

Gregorian Calendar

The present calendar was adopted in the Sixteenth century, the Julian or old Roman calendar having become greatly erroneous. Luigi Lilias Ghiraldi, frequently called Aloysuis Lilues, a physician, of Verone, projected a plan for amending the Julian calendar, which, after his death was presented by his brother to Pope Gregory XIII. To carry it into execution, the Pope assembled a number of prelates and learned men. In 1577 the proposed change was adopted by all the Catholic princes, and in 1582 Gregory issued a brief abolishing the Julian calendar in all Catholic countries, and introducing in its stead the one now in use, under the name of the Gregorian or reformed calendar, or the "new style," as the other was now called the "old style." The Gregorian calendar was not adopted in England until 1752.

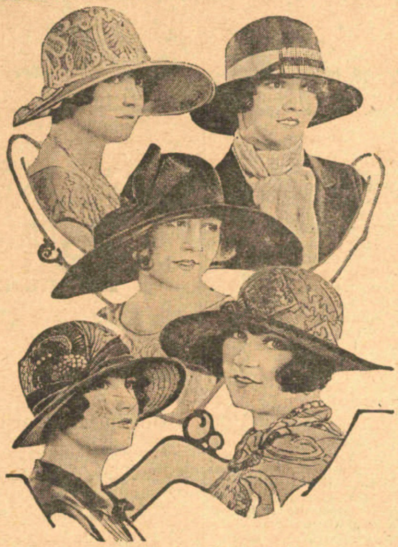
Pugnacious Crayfish

Crayfish are so pugnacious that if two of them are put in the same crate or open pen one will kill the other, or, like the farmer's dog, die barking at the hole. That is why, when the University of Washington shipped a dozen rare specimens from its aquarium in Seattle to the fish pool in New York, the shippers wound up each crayfish in yards of wet cheesecloth. The consignment came through whole and healthy.—Youth's Companion.

THE LAST HATS OF SUMMER; FOR TOTS' SUMMER WEAR

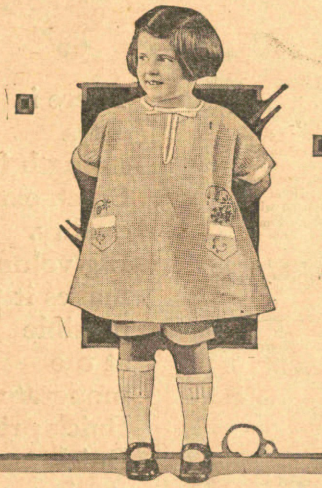
THE last rose of summer and the last hat of summer are alike beautiful, but whereas the last rose was left blooming alone, the last hat is blooming among myriad others. Genius is burning like everything with millinery designers; they continue to overflow with fine ideas for midsummer. Perhaps the season inspires the loveliest headwear or perhaps they enjoy exercising talents that were more or less suppressed last winter, during the vogue of untrimmed and uninteresting hats.

Here are five hats which have come into bloom recently in the millinery garden and have been chosen as representative of beautiful types suited to midsummer. First there is the beloved leghorn, adorably developed by an applique trimming of handmade renaissance, laid over the crown. The brim-edge is bound with silk in a color and on both the upper and under brim three tight little, bright little roses are posed, with folded silk stems. This is an exquisite hat. Next comes a wide-brimmed, black lace hat with semi-facing of chiffon and a flange on the upper brim of a novelty millinery fabric which is also used for the bow that completes a simple but impressive model. Beautiful handcraft is the outstanding feature of the hat of tagal braid, turned up at the back. It has a collar of folded velvet and an intricately made trimming of narrow braid and small berries placed at the right side. Among these softly feminine headpieces the black Spanish sailor stands out boldly. It is a bangkok straw with a collar of black belting ribbon arranged in pencil plaits across the front, edged with a narrow contrasting ribbon. This is a tailored hat of the severe type, to be worn with a suit of similar character. Midsummer calls for the lovely wide-brimmed, hair-braid hats, like that which brings this brief story to a happy ending. Lace overlays the top of the shape and extends over the brim edge and a cluster of roses is posed at the front. This model is lovely in any of the light colors.



Five of the Latest Summer Hats.

Many a ways and means committee may work overtime considering the problem of keeping little tots clean without getting any further than the washtub. In a grimy world this homely friend of the family is the only answer. Here stylists come to the rescue with clothes of all kinds that can be washed and ironed easily and quickly; and it happens that these very simply designed things look better than any others on the youngsters.



An Easily Laundered Dress.

In hot weather for those who live near the beaches, bathing suits and beach coats may bring laundry work down to the irreducible minimum. Little ones wear their knitted bathing suits during most of their waking hours when they can play on the sands. Beach coats to be worn over them when needed are made of gay printed terry cloth, which does not need to be ironed. They may be made of other printed cottons or of heavy, unbleached domestic, with cut-out figures of little animals, flowers, children or birds applied to them. These are sewed down with cotton floss, using the buttonhole stitch.

Chambray, cotton broadcloth, coarse linens and gingham maintain their lead at the head of the list of dependable fabrics for little dresses and rompers. Nearly all dresses are made with panties to match and nearly all have round collars in white or a plain color and banding on the sleeves and pockets to match the collar. The pantie frock pictured, of checked gingham, is cut with kimono sleeves round neck, slit a little way down at the front, and straight panties. It is hardly more difficult to iron than a handkerchief. The floral motif sketched on and above the pockets is done with cotton floss in the lazy daisy stitch. Little boys' suits are just as simply designed; most of them made of chambray.

Even frocks and suits in which the little tots finish the day, when they are tidied up for the family dinner, are designed very simply. Dotted swiss, with colored dots on white, is liked for them and their round collars of white swiss are worked about the edge with floss matching the dot in color.

Last Season's Frock

If last season's frock seems not quite fresh, why not make an overdress of georgette in plain color? That is the popular vogue now. Or use it on the skirt in tiers, wide tucks or in plaited lengths. Overlay the sleeves with it and use it as a scarf, collar or a bolero.

Care of Suede Shoes

Pale colored suede shoes require some care to keep them beautiful. They will not look well after they have been worn in the rain, so do not wear them on a doubtful day. But if they have been caught in a shower only, continual brushing will soften them again. Some suede shoes wear shiny in patches. The nap is quickly rubbed up by a vigorous application of the wire brush sold at most shoe shops.

A black velvet gown that receives much attention in a colorful season has huge sleeves of white lace embroidered in gold.

Married At Battle Creek

From the Battle Creek Enquirer we clip the following: "A quiet and impressive wedding ceremony solemnized by Rev. William Studwell at the parsonage of St. Thomas church at 5:30 o'clock Saturday, June 26th, united in matrimony John L Bean of this city (Battle Creek) and Miss Mildred Rock of Jackson. The bride was becomingly gowned in biege Canton Crepe and carried a handsome bridal bouquet of roses. The groom was accompanied by his son, Charles, and wife who assisted with the details of the occasion The groom is a well known department foreman in charge of the bindery and shipping department of the Gage Printing company, and has long been connected with that concern. The bride's home residence is a prosperous farm at North Adams. Following an extended wedding journey by automobile through Indiana and Illinois, the newly wedded pair will be at home after September 2nd at their residence 472 Maple St., Battle Creek." The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rock of this village, and has a host of well wishing friends here.

A Strayed Pigeon

Elmer Helmick's farm has been the scene of strange happenings recently. On Saturday, June 19, among their flock of doves at the barn they noticed a different bird and were surprised to find the new pigeon was tame and could be handled. Upon its leg was a rustless metal band with an embossed number together with a very small line of type which at first could not be deciphered, but later was found to spell "Belgium" and the Helmicks and others who have seen this pigeon, are wondering where it came from and just why it decided to tarry with them. It was at first thought the bird had been wounded or hurt, as it appeared sluggish and unable to fiy. Later investigation does not indicate a wound, but it may have been extremely fatigued by a long flight or insufficient food.

The bird resembles the domestic doves about the barn except it is vastly more familiar with mankind and very intelligent, showing some degree of training. Whether this bird belongs to the United States Army Service and has been sent out for scientific purposes, or really is a stray leftover from the World war and may have navigated thousands of miles of ether to get to our shores nobody knows, and as it cannot talk they have not questioned it. Any one who can solve the riddle is welcome to do so.

He is not the only bird that thinks Southern Michigan is ideal but just why he picked out this particular location is an enigma.

Everybody Loses When Timber Burns
Six Rules For Preventing Fire In The Forests
1. Matches—Be sure your match is out. Break it in two before you throw it away.
2. Tobacco—Be sure that pipe ashes and cigar or cigarrette stubs are dead before throwing them away. Never throw them into brush, leaves, or needles.
3. Making Camp—Before building a fire scrape away all inflammable material from a spot 5 feet in diameter. Dig a hole in the center and in it build your camp fire. Keep your fire small. Never build it against trees or logs or near brush.
4. Breaking Camp—Never break camp until your fire is out—dead out.
5. Brush Burning.—Never burn slash or brush in windy weather or while there is the slightest danger that the fire will get away.
6. How to Put Out a Camp Fire—Stir the coals while soaking them with water. Turn small sticks and drench both sides. Wet the ground around the fire. If you can't get water stir in dirt and tread it down until packed tight over and around the fire. Be sure the last spark is dead.
Michigan is the nation's playground. Last year 2,500,000 vacationists enjoyed Michigan's natural beauty. And summer visitors spent $200,000,000 last year in Michigan.
For here are giant forests . . . wooded wilderness rich in primitive attraction . . . wild life . . . an ideal vacation land.
It is the duty of each resident of Michigan to preserve this natural beauty. For each resident benefits by Michigan's resources.
Last year forest fires burned over 725,928 acres. These fires in addition destroyed a proportionate amount of property and the cost to suppress them alone amounted to $125,042.88.
Extinguish camp fires . . . break your match . . . "Heel In" your lighted cigar, cigarette or pipe ashes. Don't scatter refuse. For EVERYBODY loses—when timber burns.

THE DETROIT BONANZA

Detroit Real Estate is moving; it is negotiable; always attractive. You ask why? Read the statistics and find a complete answer.

Three years ago, if you remember, they were telling us that real estate deals were slow. Right after the close of the world war there was stagnation, but the Grand River North-west section kept right on growing. Business was marching on into the Taylor Sub-divisions, of which none have been more popular than the Brightmoor-Woodworth.

Here you find highest restrictions ideal location; big possibilities; It makes us friends every time we sell a lot. It won't cost a cent to look our properties over. Seeing generally means buying.

The State Highway Department on June 21st inaugurated a survey of the amount of passenger and heavy traffic on trunk lines. On this route through North Adams which is simply in favor of M 23. Mrs. Robert Trumbull was appointed as census taker. She reported 421 vehicles during 14 hours both ways consisting of trucks, passenger cars and various, which it is claimed was the highest of any trunk line on that date. Two more dates will be designated for this census work later, and the trunk line showing the largest volume of traffic will presumably be paved first if not already paved. If this test had been applied on July 4th or 5th or any special day the number would have been much more. Most of the readers probably wonder why our good gravel road east of the village which cost such a big sum should wear out so quickly. This is the answer. Few realize the number of wheels which pound this road bed every 24 hours.

MILK FOR WORKERS IS URGED SERVED

Milk is recognized as the elixar of life by the National Dairy Council at its meeting in Detroit. Should the resolution calling on all factory operators to supply workers with a bottle of milk in the mid-forenoon and the mid-afternoon, receive justified recognition, Michigan dairymen may look for an era of great prosperity in the very near future.

This service, several officers of the Council declared, would be as beneficial to workmen as the school service, by which thousands of pupils in all parts of the United States are provided with milk twice each day.

Tests of the efficiency of men before and after using milk between meals, showed gains of from 12 to 60 per cent in the efficiency of factory workers, Samuel McWilliams, of Huntington, Ind., a delegate, said.

In many instances, the number of men reporting sick fell off more than half during the period milk was served in all factories in Huntington.

Leap In River Douses Flaming Clothes of Boy in Gas Explosion

A jump into Belle river and a hurried dash to a doctor's office probably saved the lives of three Marine City youths after they figured in a gasoline explosion in a lunch room. The boys are Frederick Bebe, 18 years old, son of the lunch room proprietor; Walter Wolfe, 18 years old, and Ray Schroeder, 16 years old, all of Marine City.

The boys had been working in the boat house which adjoins the lunch room. They came in for lunch and young Bebe started to turn off the fire under a coffee urn. There was an explosion which burst one of the walls of the building. Young Bebe jumped into Belle river and extinguished the flames. The other two were severely burned by the flames and the doctor who attended them say their eyesight is endangered.

Car Dodges Another Then Runs Into House

R. C. Stoner, a taxicab driver, avoided a collision with another automobile at a Flint street corner, but in doing so he ran his car right into the front of the home of James B. Lyons and moved the building four inches back on its foundation.

Stoner's taxicab shot across the street, up a terrace and into the house. Neither Stoner nor his two passengers were injured.

DETROIT IS TOLD COST OF WAYNE

Detroit's plan to buy the tract of land and buildings at Fort Wayne will cost $3,700,000, it was brought out at the hearing in Washington before the house military affairs committee on the James bill, which authorizes the sale of surplus war department real property.

Representative James told the committee he had received a letter from Mayor John W. Smith, of Detroit, in which the latter stated the city expects to buy Fort Wayne. Major M. D. Wheeler, of the quartermaster's department, said Fort Wayne had been appraised at $3,700,000. Major Wheeler made it clear that this was not a final appraisal but merely a rough tentative valuation placed on it and that there would be a final valuation made olny when the property is ordered sold.

Radio Train Stop, Detroit Invention Adopted By Road

Installation of the automatic train control system, invented by Thomas E. Clark, Detroit radio expert, and tried out recently on the Pere Marquette railroad, will be ordered on all lines of the Michigan Central, it was announced following a test run over the Detroit-Chicago route, part of which has been equipped with the system.

The Clark system is operated by radio-electric waves. Radio transmission stations replace the usual semaphore mechanism boxes along the right of way and supply radio-electric energy to the rails, whence they are picked up by receiving apparatus mounted on the locomotive.

This apparatus so interprets the signals as to halt the train automatically, through application of the air brakes, should the engineer fail to heed danger signals which are lighted in the cab by the same equipment. The tests included running into an occupied block of track at high speed and disregarding the visual signals. The automatic apparatus brought the locomotive to a quick stop, demonstrating to railroad officials the efficacy of Mr. Clark's system.

Petoskey to Push Plea For U. S. Harbor Work

Although the government has failed for several years to appropriate funds for dredging, breakwater repair and a new lighthouse for Petoskey harbor, the waterfront this year is busier than ever before. Freight handled is expected to establish a new record during the summer.

Lumber, logs, cement, coal and general freight, as well as fish shipments, make up the bulk of the cargoes handled.

In view of the increasing shipping activity, further effort sare to be made to obtain government aid for the harbor. The lighthouse, washed away in a storm two years ago, has not been replaced and the stone breakwater has been washed out until there is believed to be donger of it blocking the harbor.

U. S. Drive on this Month to Stem Border Liquor

The long heralded drive of the administration for full enforcement of the prohibition laws will begin early in July, when Lincoln C. Andrews, assistant secretary of the treasury, will add between 800 and 900 new agents to his forces and attempt a bottling up process along the Detroit river and Mexican border.

Michigan Scientists on Way to Explore North

An expedition that will penetrate into northern wastes never before trod by man and that will seek scientific data that may aid navigation on the Atlantic ocean, has been started on its way by the University of Michigan. Three scientists headed by Professor William H. Hobbs, of the geology department, left for Boston where they will be joined by three other experts and will sail immediately for Greenland to begin their work.

Second Ferry Needed for Mackinac Straits Crowd

A decided increase in tourist traffic has compelled the state to put the second ferry in service on the Straits of Mackinac run from the lower to the upper peninsula. The number of cars being transported was estimated at 35 per cent greater than at the same time last year. The first ferry was put in operation several weeks ago. Both craft have been enlarged and their capacity is double what it was in 1925.

Scene of Reliability Tour Start

The great Ford airdome and factory that has brought Dearborn to the front as the world's airplane center, will be the scene of the start of the second annual Commercial Airplane Reliability Tour August 7.

Today, three Detroit-made planes are winging their way on the pathfinding trip over the 2,269 miles covering Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio. The pathfinding planes are expected to return to Dearborn about July 20, spending nearly two weeks on the trip.

The itinerary follows:

Start 1:30 p. m., August 7, Saturday, Dearborn to Chicago; 8th, Sunday at Chicago; 9th, Monday, Chicago to Milwaukee; 10th, Tuesday, Milwaukee to Twin Cities; 11th, Wednesday, Twin Cities to Des Moines; 12th, Thursday, Des Moines to Lincoln; 13th, Friday, Lincoln to St. Joseph; 14th, Saturday, St. Joseph to Wichita; 15th, Sunday, at Wichita; 16th, Monday, Wichita to Kansas City; 17th, Tuesday, Kansas City to St. Louis; 18th, Wednesday, St. Louis to Indianapolis; 18th, Thursday, Indianapolis to Cincinnati; 20th, Friday, Cincinnati to Fort Wayne; finish p. m., 21st, Saturday, Fort Wayne to Detroit.

Following is the length of each "hop":

Detroit to Kalamazoo to Chicago, 255 miles; Chicago to Milwaukee, 83; Milwaukee to St. Paul, 291; St. Paul to Des Moines, 218; Des Moines to Lincoln, 125; Lincoln to St. Joseph, 125; St. Joseph to Wichita, 197; Wichita to Kansas City, 180; Kansas City to Moline, 230; Moline to Indianapolis, 210; Indianapolis to Cincinnati, 85; Cincinnati to Fort Wayne, 125; Fort Wayne to Detroit, 145; a total of 2,269 miles.

Henry Ford's activity in the manufacture of airplanes and the expectation that soon a huge factory at Dearborn would be turning out planes almost as fast as "flivvers" are being rolled out of the Rouge plants, has turned the spotlight of the aviation world upon Michigan.

Dearborn is pictured as the center of this huge industry, where passengers from all parts of the world alight from their flying ships, where mail destined to every corner of the globe will be transferred and even the Postmaster of Detroit foresees this year, the establishment of a night air-mail service between Detroit and Chicago and Detroit and New York to supplement the various mail services now leaving Wayne County by the "overhead" route.

Although the Kent county property has been used for nearly 10 years as a landing field, the improvements which have been made this spring provide facilities for the largest passenger planes, and it is probable the schedule of the Detroit-Grand Rapids passenger service by the tout Air Services, Inc., for which these improvements have been made, will be announced soon.

Twenty-five years ago the property, consisting of a tract of about 140 acres was acquired for the West Michigan State Fair, but after a few years, when the present fairgrounds at Comstock park were presented to the fair association, the title passed to the county and for a number of years prior to the war the board of supervisors carried on the experiment of utilizing the place as a work farm for the county's prisoners.

About that time the Grand Rapids Aero club was formed and one or two private airplane companies, including the Roseswift company, sprang into existance. The Aero club obtained a five-year lease of the farm as a landing field.

For several weeks steam shovels and trucks have been utilized in leveling the property, removing the saucers from the ends of the old race track and filling in the depressions. Two runways, each 300 feet long, have been completed. A club house will be finished within another fortnight. In this clubhouse will be office accommodations for the Stout concern. Upwards of $12,000 has been expended on the improvements.

Descendants of Pioneer Family to Hold Centennial

One hundred years ago, Ira Preston, of Rush, N. Y., formerly from New Haven, Conn., visited Macomb county, Michigan, and purchased 400 acres of land from the government on sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, town of Shelby, and arranged for the building of a saw mill on the middle branch of the Clinton river. This was the first mill in Michigan to cut white pine.

In April, 1827, Ira Preston, wife and family, together with several young men, reached Detroit by boat, bringing with them irons for the sawmill and to make an ox cart.

They went into the woods at Detroit, made the necessary parts for the ox cart and purchased oxen. They loaded their household goods and sawmill parts on the cart and started north. The first day took them to Old Mother Hanson's inn, at what is now Royal Oak, where they stopped for the night. They then pushed on to Elias Wilcox home two miles east of the present village of Washington, where they made their me until they had erected their log house near the site of their intended saw mill. The dam was erected, the mill built, and the Preston sawmill became a noted location and performed a very useful part of the development of that community. The mill was run y different members of the family for about 50 years.

The young men, Rowley, Tupper, Brainard and Kniffen, who came to Michigan with Ira Preston, later married into the family and, as each ughter or son was married, they were each given 80 acres of land. Some of this land is now in the hands of their grand-children and on one of the 80s a centennial celebration is to be held July 24.

The event is expected to attract about 500 members of the family, who are now scattered over many states

Wyandotte Hospital Is Deeded City by Heirs

On behalf of the heirs of the late Captain J. B. Ford, a deed to the site and buildings of the Wyandotte hospital was presented to the city of Wyandotte by John B. Ford.

The hospital was built by the Ford heirs and has been in operation for several months. The deed was received for the city by Mayor H. S. Amio.

Writ Dismissed to Cancel Charter of Michigan Phone Co.

Quo warranto proceedings to annul the charter of the Michigan Bell Telephone company, begun in the state supreme court by Attorney General Andrew B. Dougherty and sent by that court to the federal court for the eastern district of Michiyan, have been dismissed by Federal Judge Artrur R. Tuttle, on Dougherty's motion.

Proceedings were brought by Dougherty, following the opening of hearings before a federal master in chancery in Detroit in the telephone company's appeal from the decision of the public utilities commission in reducing rates in Detroit exchange and refusing to give increases in rates asked in certain other exchanges. Dougherty, in his suit, alleged that the Michigan Bell company was violating the Michigan anti-trust laws.

With the removal of tre quo warranto proceedings to the federal court, the attorney general's office gave up hope of obtaining a decision to dissolve the telephone company or to cancel its charter. The state supreme court said that only questions that could be settled by the federal court were involved in Dougherty's suit.

To stumble is human, but to get up and go on approximates the divine.

18,000 Pheasants to Be Freed by State For Hunting Season

Eighteen thousand pheasants will be released by the Conservation Department in Michigan game covers this fall, according to John Baird, director of conservation.

This will be the largest number ever planted by the state in one season, the quota of the last two years being from 10,000 to 15,000 birds each year. All of the pheasants were raised at the state game farm at Mason, and are Chinese ring necks.

The pheasants now in the covers have had an unusually good nesting season, it is said, and with the new birds will give the sportsman excellent hunting and opportunity to fill the game bag with the limit, Mr. Baird believes. He does not think there is any danger of the pheasants multiplying to such extent that they will harass the farmer and grain grower, as is the situation in Washington.

Head of Farm Youth Is Blown Off on Birthday

Michael Pitock, 18 years old, accidentally cut short his own birthday when he shot off his head. Pitock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Pitock, farmers, living two miles west of Deckerville, was preparing to shoot a cat. In some manner the hammer of the double-barreled gun which he was using had caught on the shelf when he attempted to take it down, exploding the charge in his face.

DETROIT TO VOTE ON SUBWAY PLAN

"Knocking the underpins from beneath a city, or giving Detroit rapid transit," will be the story read to the voters of the Michigan metropolis when they step up to cast their ballots in November.

In other words, the question of routes for the proposed subway, that has been declared the only solution of jammed streetcars, jitney-filled streets and long hours spent by workers going and coming from work, will be submitted to the electorate.

And ratification of those lines serving Dearbornward, east and north, seems assured, thus giving fair hopes of an early solution of the traffic problem for those persons now spending two to three hours on street cars daily. It is estimated that the subways will shorten this time to an average of an hour daily which forecasts a great trend of population to the west, north and east of Detroit and the attendant increase in property values.

The first routes in Detroit will be of the two-tube variety, extending into the downtown districts. Until express service is provided to take in an area of 15 miles from the downtown section, it would not be necessary for the city to construct the four-tube system.

Under the plan which the rapid transit commission will submit to the people of Detroit, only local service will be provided. This means that stops will be made at mile stations, and at points so located as to tie in with the surface lines.

The public has already approved the financial end of the rapid transit system. This calls for the creation of special assessment districts, the theory being that the sections receiving the greatest benefit from the construction of the underground passageways would pay the greatest portion of the construction costs.

108 Miles of Roads Are Accepted For State Improvement

A total of 108 miles of highways has been accepted for improvement by the state as trunk line highways.

The longest strip of road is 49 miles, running from Jackson to Woodberry and through to M-39. The stretch is known as the Clinton trail.

Another strip 41 miles long from the junction of M-10 at Clarkston Forks north to Millington and other Thumb points, was selected.

The administrative board agreed to build 28 miles of concrete road. Half of this is on M-14 between Hudson and M-23 and will be built by prsion labor. Frank F. Rogers, highway commissioner, said the work would be done this year.

Contracts were awarded also for the surfacing with asphalt of about half a mile on M-65 in Ann Arbor and 1.27 miles on the same route just outside the city limits of Ann Arbor. Another contract calls for the surfacing with concrete of 12.8 miles on M-60 between Cassopolis and Niles.

Twelve miles of gravel road will be built in Berry county on M-79 and a bridge approach and 1.5 miles of concrete was ordered on M-53 near Almont.

Peddleless Car is Made by Ford for Cripple at Lowell

Crippled since childhood, [illegible]glo Barney, of Lowell, Mich., although he is only three feet tall, now drives his own car, thanks to Henry Ford. Despite his handicap, Barney can do most things nearly as well as the average man. He can plow and cultivate, harness a horse and do all the chores about the house.

The time came, however, when he was not satisfied with his hand-propelled chair, and he yearned to drive a motorcar. He took his problem to Ford, and asked him if it would be possible to make a car without foot controls. The result is a machine that looks the same as the regular touring car, except that the levers, instead of being on the floor, are mounted on the side of the sttering wheel shaft.

Carp Kills Out Fish By Destruction of Water Plant Life

If there is one thing more than another that is anathema to sportsmen anglers it is the carp, and with good reason. This transplanted foreigner has multiplied in the inland shallow fresh water lakes of the country to an unbelievable extent and has in many places actually crowded out the native fishes and ruined hook-and-line fishing.

Contrary to the belief of many, the carp does not feed on other fishes. It is of the sucker family and feeds in the mud on the bottom of lakes, streams and marshes, consuming roots and plants and any soft animal food it may find there. Where very numerous it destroys all plant life and thus makes the waters infested by them uninhabitable by the game fishes, the young of which must find their food in the minute animal life among the plants. This prevents normal reproduction of such species as the basses, crappy and sunfishes, and eventually drives them out.

Carp thrive best in comparatively shallow waters with muddy bottoms and abundant vegetation. In some of the larger lakes the shallow bays only are suitable for spawning of the nest building game fishes and here also is where the carp are wont to feed.

The most effective met[illegible]own for eradicating carp is to fish for them with seines, long nets which are dragged through the water, the catch being landed on shore. Some such nets exceed a mile in length and are operated by horse power or engines. The taking of carp in this way has become a large and lucrative business in Michigan.

Tutor of Youth in 'Hold-Up Art' Given Long Prison Term

Anthony Daniels, 38 years old, a paroled prisoner and said to be a "crime instructor," was found guilty of robbery armed by a Detroit jury before Judge W. McKay Skillman and sentenced to serve from 10 to 20 years in Jackson prison, with a recommendation of 15 years.

The star witness against Daniels was Russell Whitcomb, a 17-year-old boy, now serving a term in Ionia reformatory for robbery armed. Whitcomb said he was instructed by Daniels to hold up a taxicab driver.

Whitcomb told the court that Daniels fully instructed him in the holdup are and gave him a revolver.

COULD NOT PUT ON HER SHOES

Mrs. Daugherty Was so Weak

In a [illegible] town of the middle West, was a discouraged woman. For four months she had been in such poor health that she could not stoop to put on her own shoes. Unable to do her work, unable to go out of doors or enjoy a friendly chat with her neighbors, life seemed dark indeed to Mrs. Daugherty.

Then one day, a booklet was left at her front door. Idly she turned the pages. Soon she was reading with quickened interest. The little booklet was filled with letters from women in conditions similar to hers who had found better health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I began taking the Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Daugherty writes, "and after I took the third bottle, I found relief. I am on my eleventh bottle and I don't have that trouble any more, and feel like a different woman. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to everyone I see who has trouble like mine, and you can use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—MRS. ED. DAUGHERTY, 1308 Orchard Ave., Muscatine, Iowa.

The late Maurice Francis Egan, diplomat and author, had no love for the pessimistic naturalistic type of fiction now so popular.

"This fiction," he once remarked at a luncheon in New York, "is as hard on modern morals as the old banker was.

"'Oh, papa,' the old banker's daughter cried, 'what a magnificent block of stock you are giving me for a wedding present!'

"'Yes,' growled the saturnine old banker. 'It will buy you your husband, your divorce and a gun, and after you kill him it will pay for your trial and acquittal.'"

The WATER BEARER

> MISS MORGAN

> Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night.

The dinner was served in one of the private dining rooms of the club, known as the Red room. The guests were those of the luncheon, with the addition of young Cox and Caleb. It appeared that they had been in some conference that afternoon and that the dinner marked the end of satisfactory arrangements. The talk was all of mutual interests, Big Business.

It appeared that the afternoon's conference had been called in connection with the threat of other Californian cities to wrest from Golden its supremacy as the metropolis of the Pacific coast. The great fire, following the earthquake, had given them opportunity to creep up in population and general progress. Los Angeles was the most formidable competitor, with Oakville, across the bay from Golden, once only thought of as a suburb of the peninsular city but now, as the actual terminal of transcontinental railroads that ended at deep water, an active rival.

With so small a party Caleb was in easy earshot of the conversation. His interests naturally centered on Wilbur Cox and they quickened at the mention of water supply.

"The board of public works will approve the plans for filling the mains with salt water from the bay in case of any big conflagration," said Cox. "That will not only obviate any repetition of disaster through the conduits breaking between here and the reservoirs, as they did in the quake, but will prove a saving."

Jack Cox turned back to Caleb.

"The governor insists that the vital thing the matter with Golden's growth is the question of adequate supply," he said in an undertone. "Naturally he concentrates on that point."

"Is there a shortage?" asked Caleb.

"Likely to be, they tell me. Better quiz the governor if you're interested. He'll pour out information on that subject like a water-gate once he gets started."

Here was food for thought. Water shortage meant water development. It might mean an opportunity.

"The government project will take years to put through," the host was saying. "Meantime we've got to get busy."

"We're leaving that end of it to you, Cox," said Winton. "Conserving water, buying and selling water—at a profit is your business."

"A reasonable profit."

"And a reasonable dividend," capped Winton with a dry smile.

The dinner was not protracted. And it broke up completely. These men seemed all to have definite things to do even at the close of the day. The guests shook hands affably with Caleb.

"An engineer? Intending to locate here? You'll find plenty to do." Such was the consensus of their greetings. The result was heartening. Out here in the West they seemed to accept a man as efficient until he proved himself otherwise, he decided. In the East it was different. A stranger would stay years on approval, almost under suspicion until he made good.

Jack Cox invited him to visit Imperial valley, as his guest, to see what had been done there and Caleb responded in kind to the cordiality and evident earnestness of the solicitation. But he had an idea—Baxter would have called it a hunch—that he would do well to stay in Golden for a while. And cultivate Cox. His Yankee mind suggested that here was a direct opening.

Cox widened it.

"I am in town for a few days," he said. "You must come up to my office for a chat over things. And perhaps you would like to look over the Crystal Springs property? Our head engineer makes regular tours. He goes Tuesday, by the way. I can arrange with him to show you round. We have some dams there that he is justly proud of. The line of earthquake fault ran right through them and—you can see for yourself how they stood it. How about it?"

Caleb accepted eagerly. He had heard of the Crystal Springs dam. Its resistance to the temblor had been the world talk of engineering.

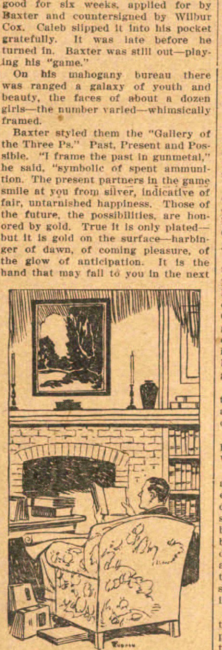
"I shall be glad to come and see you," he said. "And glad of the chance to see the property. Thank you."

"Good! I shall expect you then. I hope you have enjoyed yourself."

Young Cox paired off with his father as the guests dispersed, and Caleb decided to walk home. An attendant gave him an envelope with his coat and hat. It was a card to the club, good for six weeks, applied for by Baxter and countersigned by Wilbur Cox. Caleb slipped it into his pocket gratefully. It was late before he turned in. Baxter was still out—playing his "game."

On his mahogany bureau there was ranged a galaxy of youth and beauty, the faces of about a dozen girls—the number varied—whimsically framed.

Baxter styled them the "Gallery of the Three Ps." Past, Present and Possible. "I frame the past in gunmetal," he said, "symbolic of spent ammunition. The present partners in the game smile at you from silver, indicative of fair, untarnished happiness. Those of the future, the possibilities, are honored by gold. True it is only plated—but it is gold on the surface—harbinger of dawn, of coming pleasure, of the glow of anticipation. It is the hand that may fall to you in the next deal, Cal, that holds the real thrill of the game. That is why, when a 'possible' becomes a 'present,' I shift the fair from gold to a silver grading, not that they are less dear, if more familiar, but because the bloom always brushes off the peach when you handle it."



Soon He Was Deep in the History of Golden.

When, the morning after the dinner, Caleb entered Baxter's room to find it, as he had anticipated, untenanted; he noticed a change in the line-up of the "three Ps." One of the gold frames had been put away. One of the silver ones held a new face. It had not been one of those among the "possible," Caleb thought, though he had not paid very close attention to Baxter's gallery. This girl had, it would seem, capitulated too quickly to have ever been classed as a "possible."

Caleb surmised it was the blond stenographer whom Baxter had termed the "peach," with whom he was now playing the "game." In the photograph there was a suggestion that the bloom of this peach was artificial. The face was petulant, fond of pleasure, disinclined to count the cost. Caleb idly fancied that the eyes held possibilities of storm that would be more than just a rain of tears on occasion, that the mouth could become hard and sullen if its owner were crossed.

He had breakfast alone in the apartment house dining room. It was Sunday. He thought of visiting El Nido but old custom precluded the idea of a Lord's day social call. He wondered if the public library would be open, thinking that he would like to read up the water history of Golden, of Oakville and Los Angeles, and then he remembered the card in his pocket. The club library should prove adequate. The Altruists was a literary as well as an artistic institution. So he walked down town, to find the place almost deserted. Everyone in Golden, it seemed, made the most of holidays out of doors.

There was no one in the library with its easy chairs and big tables, its desks and deep lounge in front of a mammoth fireplace. The walls were lined high with books, well arranged, so that it was little trouble to find what he wanted. Soon he was deep in the history of Golden, with a big taap of the Bay region close beside him.

He went to bed early. Sometime in the night Baxter came home. Caleb found him sleeping the next morning, his head tucked on a forearm, handsome but jaded, settled until noon. Caleb waited until Cox should have had time to answer his mail and then presented himself at the offices of the Crystal Springs company. Cox's greeting was cordial.

"Do you mind waiting a few moments?" he asked. He pressed a desk button and a shrewd-appearing young chap entered whom Caleb rated as Cox's secretary.

"Send me a stenographer, Harry, will you?" asked Cox. "I have given you all you can handle and I want to get out some instructions on that cement matter. The stuff is far from standard or contract quality."

The stenographer entered, a girl, quiet, dressed in a dark business suit, deftly taking the dictation given her by Cox in a low, unhesitating voice. Caleb, looking over an engineering journal, hardly noticed her.

"Take this letter," said Cox, then turned to Caleb, as the girl changed a page in her notebook. "I find that Hinckley, our engineer in chief, is not coming in this morning. He will be at Crystal Springs tomorrow, so I am going to give you a letter to him. A car will be here for you in the morning at eight-thirty, if that suits you. I am sorry I cannot give the time to go with you myself."

It was said graciously, with a certain air of assurance that Cox would actually have gone with Caleb if he could have spared the day.

"Now, Miss Morgan," said Cox. "To E. H. Hinckley, introducing Mr. Caleb Warner."

The girl's poised pencil wavered for a second, while her face lifted and her eyes gazed wide at Caleb, then it dipped and automatically inscribed stenographic characters. They were blue eyes and the face one he had seen before. Where? The dress was more demure, the blond hair less fancifully arranged, but there was no mistaking the features, the general expression, startled from business calm to personal interest.

Miss Morgan was Baxter's "peach," the girl whose photograph now occupied one of the silver frames on Baxter's bureau. Baxter was home, asleep, the girl was on duty. There were shadows under her eyes but there was a flush in her cheeks as she stared at Caleb with an interrogation that was almost a challenge, before she bent to her work as Cox went on with the letter.

Caleb imagined what she was wondering. He had been mentioned to her by name by Baxter. She was trying to guess whether Baxter had done the same by her, whether Caleb had seen her photograph, what chance had brought him to the private office and her into it on the same occasion?

Caleb's face showed nothing and, when the letter was ended, he was again reading the journal. Nor did he look up when the girl left at Cox's "that is all, Miss Morgan." He did not wish to embarrass the girl. What she did in her own time was, if it did not prove detrimental to her duties, her own affair—most certainly not his.

She did not return. A few minutes later the secretary came quietly in with the letter of introduction which Cox read, signed, slid into its unsealed envelope and passed to Caleb.

Idea of Inferiority Not at All Uncommon

The feeling of inferiority is an experience so nearly universal that it cannot be considered abnormal or evidence of disease, declares a writer in Hygeia Magazine. Most of us have had this feeling at some time in our lives, such as when making a speech, undertaking a new job, or taking a prominent part in some social function. The stammering, trembling, palpitation and emptiness of mind which comes at being called on to face a new situation are familiar to all of us.

However, by establishing habits of courage and self-reliance and by learning to attend to the matter in hand rather than to our feelings, most of us have been able to overcome these difficulties. If these feelings of inability to meet the situation are not faced frankly and overcome, one establishes a habit of fear. Then the sense of failure and the feelings of inferiority become habitual, and one's lot will be indeed unhappy.

Java's Jungle Ship

In the midst of a forest in the island of Java, not many miles from the chief port, Batavia, lies a big merchant ship, fully rigged. It is a long way from any navigable water, and is surrounded on all sides by jungle growth. Yet it was not built there.

Visitors who have seen this strange sight have wondered how a ship came into so strange a position, until the explanation was forthcoming.

The island and the whole of that region is highly volcanic, and in the course of one of the gigantic eruptions a tidal wave swept inland for many miles, carrying everything before it. On its crest rode a merchant ship. The wave receded and left the vessel high and dry.

No More Rejection Slips

At last I have discovered the secret. After all these years of heart-breaking, back-breaking, almost fruitless toil to land my manuscripts in print I see ahead the road to success. I have discovered a method of eliminating the rejection slip.

I do not assume all the credit myself. I cannot truthfully say that I am entirely a self-made man. Many are the conscientious editors whose wise words have pointed out the way. Yet it has been my ready comprehension of basic truths, my ability to read between lines, that has brought it all about, and I modestly take myself for all I am worth.

Yes, at last I have discovered the secret, the true method of eliminating the rejection slip. I am going to stop writing.—Kansas City Times.

POULTRY

HIGH COST OF HATCHING EGGS

It costs $1.06 to raise a leghorn chicken from the time the egg is set until the bird is six months of age. This was revealed by the class in poultry management, conducted by Prof. L. F. Payne, head of the poultry department at the Kansas State Agricultural college. The class recently completed a problem on the cost of hatching eggs and rearing the pullets to maturity.

The cost for hatching 100 chicks was based on the following items: Eggs at $5 a hundred, fuel at 45 cents, labor at 63 cents, interest on investment in incubator at 68 cents, depreciation 65 cents, tax 26 cents, making a total of $10.27. The cost for running the machine for three hatches was figured at approximately 10 cents for each chick.

The cost for brooding and rearing from the time the chickens were hatched to six months of age includes interest, depreciation and tax on the houses, brooders, drinking fountains, fencing, feeding hoppers, supply hoppers, self-feeders, and also such items as straw, fuel and labor at 25 cents an hour, totaled $54.68 for 100 chickens.

Feed consumed by the 100 chickens until they were six months of age amounted to 2,215 pounds of grain and mash, and 1,708 pounds of milk. The food cost of the chicks for the first 12 weeks was 20 cents a chick, and for the last 12 weeks it was 41 cents. This brought the total feed cost of 61 cents for each chick and $1.25 for the entire expense account of each of the chicks from the time the eggs were set to maturity of the chicks at six months of age. Deducting from this the income from the broilers and cull pullets, the total cost for each pullet matured was $1.06.

Feather Eating Caused by Idleness and Feeds

Feather eating is often caused by idleness and lack of something in the ration which the birds crave. Overcrowding in a small poultry house brings the birds in close contact with each other and may start the habit. One of the best remedies is to turn the hens out on range, where they will separate and become interested in other things.

One pultryman reports that feeding a little raw ground bone each day seems to satisfy the bird's appetite and they stopped picking at each other. Feed a balanced laying mash and plenty of green feed. Scatter the scratch grain in straw litter so the hens will keep busy. If only a few hens have the habit a short observation of the flock may locate the offenders and they can be isolated.

Clean Poultry Quarters Necessary for Success

Thorough cleaning of the poultry house every few days is absolutely necessary if the flock is to be kept free from disease. Not only infections but lice and mites develop under unsanitary conditions.

Cleanliness means not only a general sweeping out, but it means cleansing with boiling lye water and it means painting the inside of the building with a good disinfectant paint which will serve the double purpose of improving the appearance as well as making it sanitary.

Unless you are willing to keep the poultry quarters clean and sanitary you cannot hope to have very much success except by accident.

Sour Milk Is Best

Sweet milk is not advised in the chick's ration. Chicks do not handle the milk sugar to the best advantage, and changes from sweet to sour milk cause digestive disorders and should be carefully avoided at all times. As it is difficult to keep sweet milk from souring in the fountains near the warm brooder stoves, it is best to give only sour milk, or buttermilk, to chicks. The lactic acid in the sour milk seems to help in retarding bowel trouble and keeps chicks healthy and growing.

Green Ducks for Market

There are two sources of income from ducks—the sale of green ducks at the age of about ten weeks, and of eggs, both for hatching and commercial purposes. Ducklings grow rapidly and they can be made to reach practically their full growth at ten to twelve weeks. This means a very intensive feeding program. Those who keep a small farm flock will find it profitable to separate those which are to be forced for market and keep them in a separate pen.

Remedy for Leg Weakness

Leg weakness is not a disease but is usually a condition brought about by faulty feeding and lack of sunlight. The feeding of cod liver oil or the exposure of the growing chick to direct sunlight will usually prevent this trouble. Cod liver oil when fed to growing chicks, should be fed at the rate of about 4 per cent of the total ration, and there is very little danger of overfeeding cod liver oil. Many start feeding it when the chicks are two or three days old.

Parasites Take Heavy Toll

Parasites take a heavy toll on the poultry flock during the summer months. Red mites and body lice are the chief offenders and should be guarded against. Oil drained from the crank case of the automobile or tractor may be used to paint the roosts and nests. Sodium fluoride dusted into the feathers around the vent and over the breast is a good cure for the lice. Whitewash the interior of the poultry house every week or so, especially during the summer.

Lining Up For Prohibition

Wet propagandists are conducting a vigorus and determined offensive and doing everything in their power to make it appear that the country generally is dissatisfied with prohibition. They have succeeded in making a tremendous amount of noise and in the next few months they undoubtedly will make a lot more. But noise is the sum total of their achievement to date. That they have succeeded in changing the views of any considerable number of voters is unthinkable. The forces responsible for national prohibition remain unshaken. Despite the wet talk that prohibition was "put across by a fanatical minority," the dry forces constituted an overwhelming majority when the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted and the Volstead Act passed. They are overwhelmingly in the majority today.

That the Protestant churches of the United States are not weakening in the slightest in their support of prohibition was shown in the four great church gatherings which met in the latter half of May. Each of these assemblages expressed its unqualified and enthusiastic support. No voice was raised on behalf of the wets' plea for modification of the Volstead Act. The votes were unanimous for upholding and reinforcing the existing laws. And this is the strength which these gatherings represented: Southern Baptist Convention, 3,600,000 members. Southern Methodist General Conference, 2,500,000 members. Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, 1,800,000 members. Northern Baptist Convention, 1,500,000 members.

These four bodies alone represent more than 9,400,00 persons, by far the greater number of them voters. And it is safe to assume that the percentage of those who disagree with their leaders on this issue is negligible. In the Presidential election of 1924, the total number of votes cast was 29,091,417. These four gatherings list only those which chanced to meet within a period of two weeks, and thus afford a dramatic illustration of the way in which the churches are rallying for prohibition.

June started off with three other notable church assemblages going on record emphatically for prohibition—the United Presbyterian General Assembly at Sharon, Pa. the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America at Philadelphia, and the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States at Holland, Mich. Every general denominational meeting brings a reaffirmation.

What the great mass of American women think about prohibition was strikingly exemplified on June 1 at the Atlantic City convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, representing 3,000,000 women. A resolution strongly endorsing prohibition was offered, and its reading was scarcely finished before scores of delegates cried, "I second it," amid hearty cheering.

"Shall I ask for a unanimous second?" the presiding officer asked.

"Yes, Yes," the women shouted and the resolution was adopted without a dissenting voice. It reads:

"Whereas, there has been much discussion during the sixty-ninth session in both halls of Congress regarding modification of the Volstead Act, and whereas, there is pronounced political activity in the States regarding this important question, theretofore be it resolved that the General Federation renew its unequivocal stand taken at the Chautauqua and Los Angeles biennials for local and uncompromising support of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act."

The Southern Methodist General Conference at Memphis called for greater determination by government officials in enforcing the prohibitory laws. "We must positively insist," said the resolutions "that when men openly flaunt their determination to violate any law of our country the government must suppress anarchy and compel obedience to law regardless of cost." The Southern Baptist Convention at Houston was equally emphatic in upholding prohibition.

An aggressive address by Wayne B. Wheeler before the Northern Baptist Convention in Washington was followed by an unanimous endorsement of the Anti-Saloon League of America as "the interdenominational agency for fighting the liquor traffic." Mr. Wheeler gave warning that the wets would conduct a hard drive during the closing days of Congress, but declared "those wet bills have no more chance than a crippled grasshopper in a pen of turkeys."

Earlier the convention had adopted resolutions which point out the course for the individual church member:

"Resolved, That we most earnestly appeal to our people as Christian, patriotic and law abiding citizens to show by their attitude and conduct a real passion for law obedience and law enforcement and a determination to safeguard our great charter of freedom at all times; and be it further

"Resolved, That we demand in no uncertain way that all public officials, especially our Senators and Representatives in Congress, use their powers in the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, remembering that it is a part of the fundamental law of the land and was adopted by the largest majority ever given for any amendment; and be it further

"Resolved, That we will as individuals, by influence and example uphold the laws of our land and use the privilege of the ballot to bring about this most needed reform, and that we will pray and work earnestly to the end that the liquor traffic may be entirely uprooted in our land and throughout the world."

Flies Not to Blame For Low Milk Flow

Flies and hot weather, generally blamed for all falling off in production of dairy cows in the summer months, are largely exonerated by Prof. O. E. Reed, of the M. S. C., in a statement just given out on keeping up the milk flow.

Underfeeding is named by Reed as the primary reason for summer decline in milk flow. Tests have shown that flies, in spite of the discomfort caused the animals, are not the most important factors in controlling production.

"The average cow usually suffers more from underfeeding during the summer than during the winter" says Professor Reed. "During the first few weeks when cows are turned to pasture, the milk flow will usually increase, but as the grass matures and hot, dry weather comes on, there are times when the cows actually suffer from lack of food. Scanty rations always result in decline in milk flow.

"More attention should be given to the condition of the pastures during this season, and effort should be made to provide a sufficient amount of feed to insure the maximum production of milk at the lowest possible cost.

"Perhaps the best way to supplement the native pasture is to provide temporary pasture, such as sweet clover. Alfalfa will also make an excellent pasture if properly handled. Other crops have been used with good results. Heavy producing cows should receive some grain regardless of how good the pasture might be, because they cannot consume enough grass to obtain the nutrients they require."

Read The Law Right

We have received the following communication from the Department of Public Safety at Lansing relative to new motor laws:

"Act 302 of the Public Acts of 1915 as amended by the Legislature in 1925, which defines "commercial vehicle" as all motor vehicles used for the transportation of passengers for hire and those constructed or used for the transportation of goods, wares or merchandise, might be interpreted as prohibiting the use of pleasure cars for hauling small amounts of grain or produce to town or the hauling of sample cases, camp equipment, etc. However, this department does not place that interpretation on the law. We believe that the farmer or any other citizen has the right to use his pleasure car for the hauling of his own produce to town or for hauling other articles of merchandise for himself without being compelled to purchase a Commercial license for the car. We believe that the Legislature intended this particular section to apply only to those vehicles used or constructed solely for the purpose of hauling passengers for hire or for hauling freight.

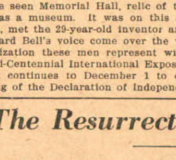
In the background can be seen Memorial Hall, relic of the Centennial, and which is now being used as a museum. It was on this spot that Don Pedro, then Emperor of Brazil, met the 29-year-old inventor and exclaimed, "My God, it talks!" when he heard Bell's voice come over the wire. The exhibits to be staged by the organization these men represent will be one of the great features of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, which opens in Philadelphia June 1 and continues to December 1 to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

The Resurrection of the Cow

Proper feeding will not only resurrect a dairy cow but will turn a cow fit only for the bologna factory, into a real profit producer for its owner, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Next to feeding scrub cows the greatest mistake the dairyman can make is the scrub feeding of his good cows.



"The condition of some of the average cows on farms is almost unbelievable," the Institute quotes. "Instead of being in good flesh and condition, many of them are poor and scrawny. Their sides are sunk, their ribs plain enough to count and their bones stick out like sore thumbs. It is plain that their run down condition is the result of underfeeding. With proper care and good feed many of these cows could be turned into better than average dairy cows."

As an instance of how better care and feed will resurrect a dairy cow, the Institute cites the case of a typical cow under observation. At the time the test was made, this cow weighed 978 pounds and gave 30.2 pounds of milk, on a ration of corn cob meal and bran, together with silage and hay. This was changed to a ready mixed, well balanced feed, together with 30 pounds of good silage and 10 pounds of mixed hay, daily. The response of the cow to the new ration was nothing short of marvelous. In less than 10 weeks this cow weighed 1,122 pounds, a gain of 144 pounds, and had continued to increase in milk until she attained a daily production of 46.1 pounds. Equally splendid results have been secured with other cows in various stage of run-down condition.

Taking the Profit Out of War

By BERNARD M. BARUCH

Reprinted from The Atlantic Monthly.

*[The February issue of the Atlantic for 1925 carried a paper by Mr. Sisley Huddleston dealing with the general subject of "taking the profit out of war," which Mr. Huddleston called "An American Plan for Peace." The first-quoted phrase was put into the language by the War Industries Board toward the close of the World War through its efforts to eliminate all war profits. Mr. Huddleston's article came to the attention of Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the War Industries Board and administrator of the non-profit plan, and (as he writes us), since it seemed to indicate a growing interest in the idea, induced him to invoke practical means to bring about a full comprehension of taking the profit out of war in the various great countries of the world. To this end he responded to a suggestion of Mr. Owen D. Young, of the Page School of International Relations at Johns Hopkins University, that he establish a course of lectures there to expound the War Industries Board plan in detail. Later he will proceed to make similar arrangements at leading universities in Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, and Japan. Agreeing with Mr. Baruch that the subject calls for public knowledge and discussion, it was natural for the Atlantic to turn to him for the following paper.—*THE EDITORS OF THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.]

Sweeping Changes In State Fair's Army of Exhibits

In order to better display the exhibits at the Michigan State Fair which will be held at the State Fair Grounds at Detroit from September 5 to September 11, a number of changes in the arrangement of the exhibits is to be made.

Those who have been attending the State Fair during recent years have seen practically the same arrangement, year in and year out, with nothing to vary the monotony, and with nothing to indicate that the exhibit was new.

This policy has been changed since the present State Fair Board was appointed and managers of the fair have been instructed to go the limit in arranging the exhibits in the best possible manner.

Sweeping changes have been planned to improve the dairy and poultry exhibits, as well as those of the boys' and girls' clubs.

At the same time the women's exhibit will be held this year in the new Women's Building, which is one of the most attractive structures on the State Fair Grounds.

INTEREST IS KEEN IN CATTLE EXHIBITION CLASS AT STATE FAIR

The Michigan State Fair cattle exhibition class promises to be the best filled this year in the history of the Fair, according to Walter B. Palmer, Director of Live Stock and Exhibits of the Fair.

One new feature at the Fair September 5 to September 11 will be the county herd class providing competition between counties in the various breeds. If a single exhibitor does not have enough animals he can combine with breeders of the same breed and show in the county herd class. If he has an especially strong individual he can also win a percentage of the prize money for the one or two animals that he owns that are high point winners.

Another strong feature of this year will be a special competition among state institution herds. The management of the Fair has provided special classes so that the fancy show herds from the state farms at Traverse City, Pontiac. Ionia and other points will have plenty of competition without showing against private owners who may not have as strong herds but whose herds rank high as to breeding and utility.

The Cattle Department of the Fair will be supervised this year, the same as last, by Robert Barney, a leading breeder of Traverse City. Prof. O. E. Reed, of the Dairy Husbandry Department of the Michigan State College has given a great deal of attention to the forthcoming cattle exhibit at the State Fair. He has also been named Chairman of the National Dairy Exposition executive committee. This exposition will be held on the State Fair Grounds October 6 to 13th.

Michigan is fast becoming a great dairy state and interest in the Dairy Cattle Classes is growing with leaps and bounds.

HORSES! HORSES!

Between 130 and 150 horses are now at the Michigan State Fair Grounds at Detroit training for the Grand Circuit races and the other light harness races which will be held at county and state fairs throughout the Middle West this summer and fall.

First arrivals at the stables in Detroit were at the grounds by May 1 and within three weeks more than fifty horses were in daily training. Of the 130 horses approximately half are trotters and pacers and the other half are saddle horses in training for the horse show.

A number of horse shows and fairs have already been held in Ohio and Indiana, and many of the animals which were being conditioned at the Michigan State Fair track have left their stables for short periods in order to compete in these shows and fairs.

Because this past spring has been quite backward, no fast time has been recorded for any of the horses at the track, but by the middle of July real speed will be on tap. By the opening of the State Fair on September 5, the horses which are to enter the various events at the Michigan State Fair will be at their peak form.

Champion Teams To Pull At Farm Day

Michigan's finest farm teams, winners of first and second places in the series of pulling contests held over the state during 1925, will fight it out for the state championship during Farmers Day at M. S. C. on July 30.

The present state record is held by a team owned by Mr. A. G. Vanderbeck, of Alma, with a draw bar pull of 2,875 pounds. Second high mark for Michigan stands to the credits of a pair owned by Allen Haskins, of Ionia, with a record of 2,800 pounds. The two will meet before the great crowd at the college Farmers Day to settle definitely the question of Michigan champion.

These great pulling teams have never met each other in a contest, and it is said that neither has ever exerted its maximum power in an official test. Vanderbeck's pair weigh 3,400 pounds and are full brothers. The team entered by Mr. Haskins will tip the scales at about 3,700 pounds.

A thirty dollar purse for the winner of the contest has been posted by the management of the Ionia Free Fair, where Haskin's team made its record last summer.

An exhibition of fancy riding by officers of the M. S. C. military department will be another of the many features provided for the Farmers Day program. The morning will be given over, as usual, to inspection of the extensive college experimental fields and barns. Basket picnic lunch will follow at noon, with the big general meeting staged under the campus trees in the afternoon.

Our National Holiday

Just at present we all stop to consider the most joyous holiday of our entire list—4th of July—which means so much to the welfare of our flag and the patriotism which keeps our pride up to its necessary degree. Is our Independence Day becoming obsolete?

On every hand we see signs which would lead one to believe the people at large were losing the most of their respect for the day and its meaning on the pages of history. How the automobile and good roads has changed our patriotic complexions. The Boys and Girls forty years ago always began to feel restless as July 4th was drawing near. How well it sticks in memory's gems the grooming old gray dobbin used to undergo just before the eventful day that he might present a reasonable appearance. Carriage axles had to be greased and an extra shine or two added to the nickeled trimmed single harness. The same properly attended to—the morning of the 4th was ushered in at exactly five minutes past the midnight hour by a heavy cannonade from the village anvil fired faithfully every three minutes. Anyone who cared to spend the remaining hours in slumber must remove his sleeping quarters out into the country. At sunrise the most terrific blast of all usually wound up the bombardment. Always the sunrise gun boomed its glad report from a retired Civil war cannon borrowed from the neighboring town which perchance had two. And then the sad circumstances sometimes hung about and some venturesome lad lost a foot or a hand or was badly mangled whereat the village doctor always wound up the scene. Do we miss those romantic days? We do and we don't. It might be said that the safe and sane 4th which our youngsters are now endeavoring to demonstrate is a blessing but who wants blessings when he craves the unusual and the exciting. What has become of Tom, Dick and Harry, the village cut-ups who performed these hair raising stunts of forty-five or more summers ago? Are all Toms, Dicks and Harrys of today always grown up and never are boys? It seems so. Gone are the pleasant anticipations of a parade of "Horribles" and the fun of "fooling" the populace as to who the big ostrich or the hideous "What-is-it" was? We confess that after some fifty years of hearing the awful din of cannon crackers and torpedoes we are a little tired of them. They don't just seem to give us the thrills of long ago. We don't exactly feel that we could jump the pole at seven feet or that we could beat in the free-for-all foot race, but where are the Toms, Dicks and Harrys who used to dote on this stuff?. Echo answers "Where"

We are a little afraid the country young folks are getting off their feed. Something's wrong. They're sneaking off to some distant lake to escape the chaperonage of parents; they're driving a big automobile loaded far too full of girls and boys for either comfort or decency. They're in questionable resorts where liquor is peddled on the quiet, or vice of various kinds shows its cloven foot Habits and actions are different. Somebody or something's out of place, otherwise the average young lady or young man would not be afraid to face pa or ma the morning after and tell just exactly where they went and what they did. As it is they probably tell it, but how much is true. Not that it's pa's and ma's business to question Johnnie or Jennie or Mary too closely—far from it. But you know how things will leak out, then perhaps six months or a year afterward the parents and friends find out the whole truth—when it is long too late to mend. We verily believe good old hilarious 4th of July to-day is being used for a miserable cloak.

New Pamphlet On Hudson Valley

Beautifully illustrated and replete with interesting descriptive matter of the historic Hudson Valley, a new pamphlet, for limited distribution, has been issued by the New York Central Railroad, the only railroad that traverses this wonderful scenic region.

Views of the majestic river from Spuyten Duyvil bridge, where the first sight of the Palisades comes to the railroad traveler, from New York, all the way to Albany are contained in the pamphlet, with numerous illustrations of historic buildings, including Washington Irving's home, "Sunnyside," the old Dutch church at Sleepy Hollow, West Point and Vassar College.

Every line of reading matter is meaty with details of the history and literature that have been made in the Hudson Valley, while small colored maps assist the reader to locate the scenes described in the text. There are views of the 20th Century Limited speeding on its course along the river and of the engineering triumph known as the Alfred H. Smith Memorial Bridge part of the $25,000,000 Castleton Cut off, as well as many others. Until the issue is exhausted, copies may be obtained by application to the Passenger Traffic Department of the New York Central Railroad 466 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Mother To Play At Farm Women's Meet

That the first annual Farm Women's Institute, to be held at the M. S. C. July 24 to 30, will be looked upon as a recreational time by those who attend is indicated by the fact that the event has been nicknamed "Mother's Vacation."

There will be plenty of "serious" side to the program for the week's gathering, but most of the farm women and city housewives who attend will view the meeting as a big vacation from the routine of their daily program at home.

With the opening of the institute still nearly a month away, 105 women had already enrolled this week, with more checking in daily. Rooms in the college dormitories will be reserved for the visitors.

In addition to the special recreational features of the program, various definite topics will be up for discussion at the meetings. Poultry, horticulture, home economics and other subject matter will be included in the "school" side of the week.

Among the prominent out of the state speakers listed on the program are: Mrs. Henry Aitken, of Beton, Ontario; Mrs. Charles Schuttler, second vice president of the American Country Life Association; Miss Bess Rowe, St Paul Minnesota; field editor of the Farmers' Wife magazine; Miss Florence Ward, of the United States Department of Agriculture. The Farm Women's Institute will close on Friday, July 30, which is Farmers Day at M. S. C. this year.

Demand Grows for Hairy Vetch Seed

Increased demand for Michigan grown hairy vetch seed, as a result of growing popularity of vetch as a winter cover crop in many of the southern states is expected by the crops department, The Carolinas Virginia and Alabama are reported as turning to this crop extensively and Michigan is the only state which is producing hairy vetch in quantity. No seed is harvested when hairy vetch is used as a cover crop, according ro authorities, hence the South comes here for its seed supplies. Considerable hairy vetch has been imported from Europe last year at fairly low prices, but it is not likely that the supply from there will increase. The carry-over of European seed is also rather small this year. Recent market quotations indicate that the price of vetch seed is strengthening quite materially.

In Michigan it is usually sown with rye and the practice does not tend to reduce the yield of rye. An average yield of vetch seed is from two to three bushels per acre, and this is considered as so much velvet by the producer. Vetch is a leguminous crop and has a beneficial effect on the soil. It may also be used for green manuring, hay and pasture. Since the climate in many sections and the soils of Michigan are especially favorable to Hairy Vetch, an increased acreage would not be unwise at this time. Anyone desiring further information concerning this crop should request Circular No. 50, Hairy Vetch from Director R. S. Shaw, Michigan Experiment Station, East Lansing.

A Joke On Masonry

What's in a name? Not much, apparently if the name happens to be shady. The Grotto Tsein or some other Masonic body of Detroit have for the past two years, rented the State Fair Grounds for their annual blowout and grand fireworks spectacles which draws a large concourse of spectators from all over Michigan. This year the Grotto rented the grounds as usual with the full privileges of signs and other advertising schemes of which there are many, so when the time drew near, a lot of enterprising candidates for office, including the governorship, rented sign boards on the grounds, supposing it would be all right.

They had just nicely got their signs in position when Groesbeck began his "clean-up" campaign on Dickinson and his henchmen. People and candidates are now exclaiming "What the dickens?" They tore down every last sign per se, and now every board is as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard, The "big noise" of the Grotto now insinuates he has been "bumped, slapped and insulted" by the Groesbeck regime and we wouldn't wonder if that were true, but the sign monkey business just did not suit the Governor, and he's boss you bet!

Candidates Blythe, Bonar and Stein, all seeking nomination for sheriff, were among those eliminated in the crusade, also that of William E. Comstock, democrat aspirant for governor. A special night at the Grotto show is to be set aside for Fred Green of Ionia and if Governor Groesbeck is present, it will be by his own invitation.

Limited To One Only

"She is in that room having hysterics! Please come at once!"

The teacher went, and found one of her girls in such shape as brought pity, disgust and anger all blended into one emotion which expressed itself in a command: "Stop that at once!"

The teacher learned that the young girl had been very weak for several days and had suspicions as to the cause of that weakness, but said nothing and sent her home to her mother with instructions that her physician be called.

The doctor examined the girl and asked searching questions and finally said to the mother, "Your daughter is starving."

"Starving!"

"Yes, starving! Look at her. She is thin and pale and this physical weakness and lassitude is due simply to the fact that she is not eating enough. What she needs is three square meals a day. No wonder she has hysterics. No girl nowadays makes such shameful exhibitions of herself, if she can avoid it! She is starving. Feed her."

"But doctor! Why! She is dieting! She has been saying she was too fat! Starving! How absurd!

"Mrs. Slank, I haven't time to explain the subject of food and proper eating, but if you will go to the library and get Dr. Rose's book called "Feeding The Family" and read it, you will understand how foolhardy you are to allow your daughter to deny herself the materials which are essential not only to health and energy, but to development and prevention of diseases of all sorts. No girl under twenty five need to worry about getting too fat, unless she is markedly overweight to begin with, or cannot exercise. All young people with their countless and various interests use a tremendous amount of energy and it is rare that there is enough left of a substantial daily ration to be stored up as fat. It is not only nonsense for young people to "diet", but it is dangerous to the healthy development of the body and its organs.

The torture of "dieting" can be left to one only: the Fair, Fat and Forty type who is usually self indulgent and indolent. Even he or she should do it in a safe way as prescribed by the physician.

Friends in North Adams were pained to hear of the serious misfortune which befell Arvin Fuller recently while unloading hay in barn with a horse fork. Arvin's arm became entangled in the tackle and he was drawn up bodily to the peak of the barn before the team could be stopped Results were badly mangled thumb and fingers. This is a very bad time of year for a farmer to be incapacitated.

FAIR GROUNDS ARE MOST ACCESSIBLE MICHIGAN POINT

World Famous Highway System Focuses There—1926 Visitors Can Dodge All Dense Traffic.

With the recent construction of new roads near Detroit and the widening of others, the State Fair Grounds in Detroit has now become admittedly the most easily accessible point within the borders of Michigan, for the hundreds of thousands who will visit it September 5 to September 11.

When the site of the State Fair Grounds was selected years ago, members of the State Fair Board little realized that it would sometime become the focal point of motorists from all over Michigan. They selected that location on Woodward avenue because a large tract of land could be secured within easy access of Detroiters at a nominal price. The city has now grown to the State Fair Grounds and around it and what were formerly only lanes and country roads near the grounds have become important motoring thoroughfares.

During the past year the Seven-Mile Road, which runs east and west at right angles to Woodward avenue, has been widened on both sides, so that motorists coming from the western part of the state or from the direction of Lansing or Grand Rapids, find a quick way of reaching the State Fair. The Seven-Mile Road intersects both Grand River avenue, which runs northwest from Detroit to Lansing and Grand Rapids, and also intersects Gratiot avenue, the main thoroughfare to Mt. Clemens, Port Huron, and other cities along the St. Clair River. All residents of the state coming from the direction of Jackson, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Benton Harbor find it now possible to cut north from Michigan avenue to the Seven-Mile Road by any one of a number of concrete highways which will take them around the crowded portion of Detroit.

For those living north of Michigan's metropolis, in Pontiac, Bay City, Saginaw, Alpena, and Mackinaw, Woodward Avenue, now the finest highway in the United States, offers the quickest and safest way of reaching the State Fair Grounds.

In order to save the annoyance which motorists experience in making inquiries as to the proper direction to follow in reaching the State Fair Grounds, officials of the State Fair Board are planning on placing at important intersections of highways in Wayne, Oakland and Macomb Counties, signs pointing in the direction of the State Fair. These signs are expected to help motorists very considerably in saving much time that would otherwise be lost in Detroit's dense traffic.

Utility Fowl Gets Recognition In State Fair List

A change is being made in the classification of the poultry exhibit at the next annual Michigan State Fair which will be held at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit from September 5 to September 11.

Members of the State Fair Board have decided this year to recognize the value of the utility and the production birds, and are offering substantial premiums in these classes.

The size of the premiums will be based on the number of entries in each class.

It is pointed out that the re-classification in these two classes will not effect the regular exhibition classes which will compete as formerly, but for prizes which have been very materially increased for 1926.

This announcement is expected to lead to the entrance of many birds that would otherwise not be exhibited by poultry farmers of Michigan.

STATE FAIR ADDS CLASS FOR BEST MICHIGAN FLEECES

A new department will have an exhibit at the Michigan State Fair to be held at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit from September 5 to September 11.

This is the Wool Department which will be housed in the Sheep Building. In previous years, there has been no wool exhibit, and although Michigan ranks among the largest wool-producing states in the country, the proper prominence to wool has not been given.

Sheep growers of the state are being asked to save their best fleeces to exhibit at the Fair. Competent judges are being secured who are thoroughly cognizant with all the factors to be taken into consideration in judging wool, and sheep growers of the state may rest assured that although new, this department will be carried out with the same care which is given to the older departments of the Michigan State Fair.

A show ring is being constructed at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit in the centerfield of the mile track for the horse show which will be staged in connection with the annual Michigan State Fair to be held from September 5 to September 11.

The show ring will be 250 feet long by 100 feet wide and is being built directly in front of the grandstand at the finish wire.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Detroit — Two wooden buildings were badly damaged by fire at the Michigan State Fair grounds June 30, causing a loss estimated at several thousand dollars. The blaze had made such headway that upon arrival of the first fire companies, a second alarm was sounded.

Detroit—Founders' day was observed June 30 in Detroit in connection with the noting of Patriotic week under auspices of the Detroit Jefferson centennial committee that has been named by Mayor John W. Smith to arrange Detroit's part in the national movement to purchase and preserve as a patriotic shrine the home of Thomas Jefferson.

Caro—State firemen will come to Caro July 13, 14 an 15, for convention. Besides exhibitions of modern fire fighting equipment several persons including James Niven of Saginaw, Dr. William T. Shaw, of the state accident board, and R. C. Longhead, of the Michigan inspection bureau, will speak. The convention will be held in the high school auditorium.

Lansing—Acting under a 1925 legislative act authorizing the addition of 500 miles to the State Trunkline highway system, the State Administrative Board has accepted 108 miles of road as trunk lines. The designation of the routes as trunk lines means they will be subject to State improvement, although it is not likely such improvements will be made this year.

Mt. Clemens—New bus service into Mt. Clemens over Jefferson avenue began recently and presaged the possible abandonment of the electric lines now operated on the lake shore by the D. U. R. Six busses will be operated in two divisions of three each over Jefferson to Mack avenue and the French Claims road to Mack. They will leave Mt. Clemens and Detroit every 25 minutes.

Ludington—A spotted fawn about three weeks old was found in Meade township, five miles east of here, by Joseph Lemmer. The creature was nearly starved, its mother having been chased away by dogs. Game Warden Elms sent it to the state game farm at Mason last week. It probably will be sent to the state forest near Grayling when it is old enough to forage for itself.

Lansing—Special rates have been promised by the railroads for the Michigan state fair in Detroit in September, L. Whitney Watkins, commissioner of agriculture has announced. Live stock and exhibits will be transported for a one way charge, passengers will be given one-half fares for the round trip and on Michigan day special excursions will be run at one way fare for the round trip.

Battle Creek—Highway robbery is the charge placed against a 12-year-old boy, Eugene Reich, of this city He is alleged to have attacked Robert Shannon, 10 years old and taken a $20 bill from him while the latter was on his way to a grocery store to pay a bill for his mother. Reich was under committment to the Boys' Vocational School at Lansing when arrested, for having assisted in stealing an automobile here recently.

Lansing — Students of Michigan State college are invited to attend the all-college dancing parties, but men and women must leave their cigarets at home, according to an edict that was issued at the first convocation of the summer session. Dr. R. C. Huston, who made the announcement in outlining the social program of the summer session, referred to the first party of the season on June 25 as the one to which some exception was made in the above rule.

Pontiac—Pontiac has adopted an ordinance permitting the sale of water to persons living outside the city limits. The rate is twice that paid by city dwellers and the consumption is limited to a quarter of that supplied inside the limits. Pontiac has been growing so rapidly that it was considered advisable to adopt a policy of selling water outside which is a reversal of the policy the city had had in effect for several years. Pontiac gets its water supply from deep wells.

Ann Arbor—One-fifth of the students attending the summer session of the University of Michigan are Methodists by faith, surpassing the Presbyterians, their nearest rivals, by a considerable percentage, according to the religious census of the Student Christian association. Twelve per cent of the students are not members of any church or have no preference, the census showed. Congregationalists, Catholics and Episcopalians rank next in order after the two leaders.

Lansing—Plans for raising a $250,000 fund to fight the dope evil in Michigan were outlined recently at a meeting of the campaign committee of the Narcotic Education Association of Michigan. The campaign committee includes the mayor of every city in the state of more than 10,000 population and two citizens selected by each mayor. It is planned to educate the public to the evils of the narcotic situation in the hope that legislative action will be demanded by the voters to remedy conditions.

Lansing—Between $13,000,000 and $14,000,000 will be paid into the primary school fund this year by the public utility corporations of the State. More than $9,000,000 has been received to date. June 30 was the last day on which payments could be made without a penalty. Many corporations have not remitted so far, and these delinquents must pay interest on the amount due the State. The money is apportioned to school districts in proportion to the children of school age, with the exception of 5 per cent which is set aside for the poorer counties.

Jackson—Of 211 passenger cars examined on M-23, near Cambridge Junction, 17 had faulty brakes and 79 had poor lights, the officers reported. Twenty-three drivers failed to carry proper drivers' licenses.

Flint—An increase in the total valuation of Genesee County property of approximately $5,000,000, nearly all of Flint, in the last year is shown by the report of the committee on footing of tax rolls and equalization made to the board of supervisors recently.

Sturgis—A program of supervised playground work in this city is to be followed out again this year during the months of July and August, C. A. Light, playground director, has announced. Five school playgrounds and a municipal playground are being used.

St. Clair—A carrier pigeon is being held here by Charles S. Missmore, pending inquiries from its owner. The bird was found completely exhausted in Missmore's yard two weeks ago. On one foot was a metal tag bearing the identification 1. F. C. 25-2005. On the other was a band with the inscription 600-S.

Detroit—The immigration border patrol is seeking an airplane which is said to be smuggling aliens from Canada into the United States. In the last three months, the United States Immigration Service has received several reports of the alleged smuggler's plane. It is thought that the plane lands its passengers in Ohio.

Jonesville—Atton Smith, 18 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, of Jonesville, was killed recently at the gravel pit of the Jonesville Gravel Co. here. Smith was carried through a chute into a bin and buried under tons of wet gravel, when a bank on which he was standing caved. The body was removed in less than an hour, but life was extinct.

Pontiac—Mrs. Palmer Glover, 19 years old, and her two children, Viola, 4, and Pearl, a year old, are dead at Orion, supposedly from ptomaine poisoning caused by eating a pickle relish. Mr. and Mrs. Glover and the children lived at the home of F. J. Lessiter, one of the members of the county poor commission. The husband and a son, 2 years old, did not eat the relish.

Ann Arbor—Proceedings to condemn certain property now held by 25 local persons or estates have been instituted by the Board of Regents of the University of Michigan. The regents have filed a bill against the property owners, in which they declare the ground now held by the defendants is necessary to the proper expansion of the University physical education programme.

Grand Rapids—A Michigan fur pageant will be staged at the sesquicentennial exposition at Philadelphia as part of an elaborate exhibit of the Michigan Fur Producers, Inc., it was decided at a membership meeting here. The exhibit will include a model fur ranch with silver black foxes on display and a fur exhibit which will include the various processes of preparing furs.

Deckerville—Michael Pitock, 18 years old, accidentally cut short his own birthday when he shot off his head. Pitock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pitock, farmers, living two miles west of here, was preparing to shoot a cat. In some manner or other the hammer of the double-barreled gun which he was using had caught on the shelf when he attempted to take it down exploding the charge in his face.

Grand Rapids — Several patent cases of importance to the automobile industry were decided on appeal by the United States circuit court of appeals in session here. In the case of the Hayes Wheel company vs. Michelin, appealed from Detroit, the decision of the appelate court reversed a decree and dismissed the action on the grounds there was no infringement on a patent for a demountable rim.

Lansing—Police recently arrested four boys, all of whom are under 10 years old, who are charged with driving away automobiles without the owner's consent. It is charged by the police that the boys would steal a car, take a joy ride to one of the nearby lakes and on their return, leave it on one of the streets in the outlying districts When located, it would be found stripped of tires and many of the other parts.

Lansing—Hearings on the revocation of the licenses of persons found guilty of speeding on Detroit streets are being held before Charles J. De Land, Secretry of State. Under the existing statutes the Secretary cannot revoke the licenses of speeders unless he is satisfied that they are mentally or physically incompetent to operate motor cars. Under the law the state can revoke the license of drunk drivers, persons leaving the scene of an accident or reckless drivers, but not speeders.

Saginaw—Declaring at the banquet of the Michigan Federation of Typographical Unions that the International Typographical Union "stands squarely behind conciliation, mediation and fair arbitration." Seth R. Brown, of Los Angeles, first vice-president of the I. T. U., said that with such an attitude between publishers and printers there was little probability of difficulty between the union printer and his employer. Plans are being made to extend the benefits of membership in the state organization to country printers.

Lapeer—Edgar H. Gould, former Lapeer County road engineer and church elder convicted of defrauding the county out of approximately $35,000 by padding road contracts, has been sentenced by Circuit Judge George W. Sample, of Ann Arbor, to serve from 7 to 14 years in Jackson. Ten years was recommended. Three road contractors, Charles B. Moore, of Metamora; J. B. Scully, of Goodrich, and D. Earle Ferguson, of Vernon, who pleaded guilty to charges of being implicated with Gould, were each placed on probation for 5 years.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NOT much relief for the American farmer from this session of congress. Out of the multiplicity of plans offered in bills, substitute bills and amendments he gets only the co-operative marketing measure which was President Coolidge's original prescription for the ills that beset agriculture in this country.

Corn-belt senators, having lost in the battle to put over their bill to raise farm product prices on the American market, refused to accept the plan supported by the administration, embodied in the Fess bill, providing for credits for farm co-operative associations. They gained the help of a number of senators who usually stand by the administration, and of all but three of the Democrats. So when the vote was taken the measure went down to defeat, 26 to 54. One substitute after another was offered and rejected speedily before the senate, with the chamber nearly empty, passed the co-operative marketing bill without a record vote. It previously went through the house but had to go to conference. It creates a new division in the Agriculture department to handle co-operative marketing problems and appropriates $225,000 for its work. Members of congress who are from farming regions do not think it is adequate to solve the problems of the farmers.

Congress planned to adjourn immediately before or after the Fourth of July and the members from the corn belt prepared to go home and begin work that, they said, would make the administration and the Republican party leaders mighty sorry for what they had done and left undone in this matter of farm legislation. The long and bitter controversy is sure to show results at the polls in November, and of course there is a lot of talk about a corn-belt candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1928. It just happens that Frank O. Lowden of Illinois is in Sweden at this time carefully studying farm methods and advocating a great international farm congress in Chicago in 1933.

One other thing has just been done to help the farmer. At the suggestion of President Coolidge, the shipping board assigned 27 available ships for the grain-carrying trade and ordered 32 additional ships put into condition for use in the same trade to assure adequate ocean transportation facilities for grain exports. Action by the board came after Secretary Jardine of the Department of Agriculture and Secretary Hoover of the Department of Commerce had appeared before the board as emissaries of the President. Chairman O'Connor said the cabinet members came to the board at the suggestion of the President "to call to the shipping board's attention the acute grain situation and the lack of sufficient ships to transport grain to the markets of the world."

GETTING ready for adjournment on July 3, the house hurried through two important measures. The first was the second deficiency bill carrying $45,000,000, of which $2,680,700 is appropriated for prohibition enforcement. An attempt to eliminate this item was made but many of the wets were absent and there were only 33 votes in favor of the motion.

Two other motions—one to knock out the $186,760 item requested by Lincoln C. Andrews, federal dry chief, for financing special federal undercover squads to check up on state officials and another to add $100,000 to the appropriation for dry law enforcement—were defeated overwhelmingly.

An appropriation of $550,000 for the administration of the new civil air bill and the construction of airways was approved.

The other big bill passed was that providing for the army's five-year air-expansion program, already passed by the senate. This was the third of the air-expansion measures, and the nation is now assured of an adequate aviation program in the commercial, naval and military fields. Estimates made by naval and military experts disclose that approximately $250,000,000 will be expended in the development of national defense aviation in the next five years.

SENATOR REED of Missouri and his committee have kept right on with their inquiry into the Pennsylvania Republican primary. Most interesting of the information obtained last week was the fact that Pennsylvania's liquor laws were being enforced largely by unofficial "snoopers" paid from a fund which was collected by the Women's Christian Temperance union and sometimes imported from other states. W. B. Wright, deputy attorney general of the state, admitted this and also admitted that he himself draws a salary of $8,000 from the W. C. T. U. as director of the prohibition enforcement unit. Wright was imported from Baltimore by Governor Pinchot. Attorney General G. R. Woodruff of Pennsylvania took the stand and defended the employment of the snoopers and the method of their payment.

SENATOR CARAWAY had a characteristic outburst in which he made a lot of violent assertions concerning the Republican senatorial primary in Illinois, attacking both the McKinley and the Smith factions. He charged that both used vast sums of money and that positions of public trust were debauched to procure contributions and influence votes. He said that Samuel Insull, the public utilities magnate, found it cheaper to come across than chance the loss of millions in reduced rates, and donated at least $500,000 individually or through subordinates. And he more than intimated that much money was paid to John H. Walker, president of the state federation of labor, and to Frank Farrington, another labor leader, to line up labor votes for Smith. Some of the persons he named refused to comment; others said he had taken advantage of his senatorial immunity to utter a mass of falsehoods. Reed's committee may disclose the truth.

WISCONSIN Democrats, in convention in Milwaukee, enthusiastically adopted a platform calling for submission of the prohibition question to state constitutional conventions, and expressing opposition to the Ku Klux klan. They selected T. M. Kearney of Racine for their senatorial candidate, and put up a full state ticket headed by Martin L. Lueck of Beaver Dam for governor.

MORE than a score of Methodist Episcopal bishops and many other leaders of that church assembled in international conference in Chicago last week, and one of the first topics they took up was prohibition. Dr. Clarence True Wilson, secretary of the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals, and others warmly defended Lincoln C. Andrews, federal administrator of prohibition, though Doctor Wilson did blame him for putting men into the prohibition enforcement unit who were not personally committed to prohibition.

DRASTIC measures designed to increase production and decrease imports and waste were put into effect July 1 by the council of ministers of Italy. The country's trade balance has been bad and the lira has been losing value, so the ministers considered the situation acute. The most important of the decrees are as follows:

Authorization for the increase of the working day by one hour. (From eight to nine hours.)

Restriction of daily newspapers to six pages and the prohibition of all special supplements excepting technical ones.

Prohibition of the opening of new bars, cafes, hotels, cabarets, pastry shops and night dancing resorts.

Prohibition of the construction of private houses and villas of a luxurious type. The only new construction permitted is of cheap houses for workers, farm laborers and small-salaried employees, farm houses or co-operative apartments representing the direct investment of small private savings. Special government aid is given for the building of cheap houses for employees of large industrial establishments.

Announcement that agreements have been reached for the reduction in price, without hurting the quality, of iron, cements, bricks and plaster.

Announcement that steps have been taken to help large employers open canteens in order to sell food to their employees at the lowest possible prices.

Announcement that agreements have been reached with industrialists to help in the production of domestic metals.

There is an interesting rumor afloat —mention of which in print in Italy is officially forbidden—that Mussolini is planning the marriage of his young daughter to the crown prince.

MAINLY because of the scandal over the smuggling of liquor into the United States, the Liberal government of Canada has been forced out of office. Prime Minister MacKenzie King announced to the house that he has asked dissolution of parliament and been refused by the governor general, so he and his cabinet resigned. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Conservatives, was called on at once to form a new ministry, which he did. His party in parliament is not strong enough to stand alone, however, and will merely attempt to pass the necessary legislation and carry on until the end of the session and the coming of the new elections. The new cabinet ministers, except Prime Minister Meighen, are all nominally "ministers without portfolio" in order to avoid the necessity of resigning their seats in parliament, which is compulsory on salaried ministers.

The lower house by a vote of 119 to 109 adopted the Conservative party's amendment to the report of the commission which recently delved into charges of gross irregularities in the customs department and involving the smuggling of liquor into the United States. The vote means that parliament has adopted the recommendations of the customs investigating committee for improved administration of the customs department; that it has approved the censure of the King administration and of G. H. Bolvin, former minister of customs, who was accused of releasing without payment of excise tax a large quantity of denatured alcohol which was used for beverage purposes, most of it going into the United States, and that there shall be a further judicial investigation into the customs administration.

ALL the Mediterranean countries and islands were severely shocked by earthquakes last week, and the temblors were also felt in Asia as far as Sumatra, where scores of persons were killed. The casualty lists in Europe were not great, but many villages were destroyed on the islands of Rhodes and Crete. A few days later, on the anniversary of the earthquake of 1925, that did so much damage in Santa Barbara, that California city experienced another temblor that damaged buildings but caused only one death.

In Transylvania there were great floods that caused the death of about one hundred persons and the collapse of thousands of houses.

NEWS of a big conspiracy to overthrow the Spanish directorate headed by Gen. Primo de Rivera has leaked out in spite of the government to prevent publicity. It was said that more than 200 of the plotters were under arrest and that the secret police were after many others. Reports from Tarragona, Cadiz and other provinces say everything was prepared there for a military uprising when the government agents discovered the conspiracy.

No Intent to Restore Monarchy in Portugal

Lisbon.—The recent revolutionary movement in Portugal was directed principally against parliamentarism but is not sympathetic with the idea of a restoration of a monarchy, according to Gen. Manuel Gomes da Costa, present head of the government.

General da Costa, who bore a leading part in the coup d'etat of May 28, When the Cabecadas ministry was set up, and then ousted his fellow revolution ry, Premier Cabecadas, on June 17, unquestionably is the most popular man in Portugal today. Despite his sixty years, he is erect, vigorous, and youthful.

The army, Gen. da Costa said, hopes to obtain the respect which is its due by carrying out useful functions in behalf of the nation instead of "serving as a puppet in the hands of politicians."

"Its only aim is to serve the country by rendering all the services in its power," he continued. "Its immediate ends are to put the house in order, to re-establish hierarchy where chaos reigns, and then to give back the reins of public administration into the hands of the politicians.

The parliament has temporarily ceased its functions and a number of constitutional dispositions are suspended. But we are not copying any dictatorial model, either Spanish or Italian. We intend to govern in our own way. Portuguese government for the Portuguese people."

Alexander the Great

A TWENTY-TWO-YEAR-OLD boy —undersized, red-headed, sickly —set out more than 2,240 years ago with the modest intention of conquering the world. And he did it.

The boy was Alexander, king of the little northern Greek state of Macedonia. He is known as Alexander the Great.

In spite of the brave resistance at Marathon and elsewhere the barbarous world-power of Persia, after conquering practically all of Asia, had again turned its hordes against Greece, sweeping the whole luckless country and well-nigh stamping out the last smoldering sparks of civilization. This outrage Alexander determined to avenge. His father, King Philip, had made himself practical master of Greece, and Alexander himself, coming to the throne at the age of twenty, had completed that subjugation. Then he set himself to the task of crushing Persia. The plan was laughable in its audacity. Alexander's army of invasion consisted of barely 34,000 men. The Persian emperor, Darius, could put into the field millions of soldiers.

Nevertheless, with his well-drilled 34,000 Alexander crossed the Hellespont in 334 B. C. and marched boldly into Persian territory.

From the first he thrust aside the mighty but ill-organized resistance of the Persian armies and, as he advanced, his name spread terror among his foes and made his progress easier. He arrived at the ancient city of Gordium. There he was shown a chariot, whose pole was fastened to its yoke by a curious and intricate knot. He was told that, according to prophecy, the man who could undo that knot should become lord of all Asia. Many had tried and failed. With one blow of his sword Alexander slashed the Gordian knot in two. The prophecy was considered fulfilled and he was hailed as the coming Asian ruler.

Meantime, Darius, with a host of 600,000 men, marched against the youthful conqueror. Alexander lured him into the narrow valley of Issus, and there, where there was no room for the huge Persian army to deploy, he fell upon and routed it.

Onward marched Alexander, conquering everywhere, seizing Syria and Egypt and pushing ahead toward the Persian capital. Darius, with another incredibly huge army, opposed him at Arbela, but the Persian host fled at Alexander's first charge. The conqueror continued on his triumphant way, capturing all Persia and pushing forward to India. After stubborn resistance from the native king, Porus, he subdued the whole land.

Persia, as in the time of Marathon, was a more or less barbarous country. Greece was still the stronghold of culture and education. Wherever Alexander's conquests went civilization and learning went also.

Alexander was for continuing his onward march after the conquest of India, but his wearied soldiers refused to go farther into the unknown. When, reluctantly, he turned back, envoys from nearly every country in the world met him, offering submission.

Now that, as master of the world, he could rest, the less worthy side of Alexander's nature cropped out. He declared that no mortal man could have achieved all that he had and that he must therefore be a god, the son of Jupiter. He went on to assert that as mankind must, after his death, worship him as a god they might as well begin at once. Callisthenes, one of his wisest counselors, opposed the plan, declaring it blasphemous. Alexander had him tortured and killed. As a lad Alexander had had three tutors. One had taught him to believe himself a deity. Another had disciplined him severely and had striven to teach him humility. The third (Aristotle) had imparted to him the love of learning. Having practiced the precepts of the second and third tutors and thereby winning the world, he now turned to the mad teachings of the first.

He declared himself a god and believed it. He tried to make his army acknowledge him as son of Jupiter. He took to drinking heavily, and in his cups would boast loudly of his own greatness. On one of these occasions he claimed credit not only for what he himself had done, but for heroic feats performed by others long before he was born. His dearest friend, Clitus, remonstrated with him for these lies, and Alexander, snatching a spear from a guard, ran him through. Sobered by his own terrible deed the unhappy monarch declared himself, with some truth, not fit to live and tried to starve himself to death.

Soon after he was found weeping violently. A courtier asked:

"Why should the divine conqueror of the world shed tears?"

"Because there are no more world's to conquer!" sobbed the king.

A three-day drunken orgy at Babylon in 323 B. C. threw him into a violent fever, and after a brief illness he died. He was barely thirty-two years old and had reigned but twelve years. In that time he had conquered everything except himself. The monarch of the world was the helpless slave of his own vanity and violent passions.

He died, and the world-empire he had built up was torn to pieces among his generals. But the civilization and learning that he fostered were destined to survive through all ages.

Industrial Revolution

The industrial revolution is generally regarded as being instituted by a series of inventions which were made in England, beginning about 1760. These inventions completely revolutionized methods of industry, and therefore introduced a new industrial era. It is correct, however, to say that there had been many years of preparation. The years immediately preceding the industrial revolution showed a great advance in mental activity.

Good Use for Old Cars

Junked motor cars are being put to a new use at Pierre, S. D., that of helping to control the Missouri river. The Big Muddy has a habit of tearing away large parts of South Dakota farm land abutting the stream, during the spring rises, and carrying them downstream, sometimes in twenty-acre chunks. The piling of logs, brush and debris along the bank has not availed to stop the river's depredation, but it has been discovered that the frames of junked cars, piled one upon another wherever the water is cutting away the bank, settle so firmly and are so resistant to the channel stream that they stop the destruction. Several score of abandoned automobiles are serving more effectively than expensive piling.

PLANE SMUGGLES CHINESE TO U. S.

A depot for smuggling aliens into the United States by airplane has been establisred six miles southeast of Windsor, Canada, in the midst of uncultivated fields, according to a report filed by Constable Jack Craiag, of Essex county, Canada.

Mr. Craig said that seeral times in the last few weeks has has seen an aviator in the fields, which are in Sandwich east township. On one occasion he said, he saw an automobile drive to the plane with three Chinese, two of whom got in the plane, which immediately took off, while the other returned to the automobile. He said he never was able to get close to the plane, which remained on the ground only two or three minutes each time, and so could not say whether it had any identifying marks.

Mr. Craig said, however, that the plane unquestionably comes from the United States, as no planes are registered in that part of the Canadian border. The aviator, he said, makes a trip daily.

Mr. Smith said the only step the Canadian authorities would take would be to arrest the aviator, if they catch him, on a charge of flying without a permit.

The United States immigration department was notified by Mr. Smith of the circumstances and said they would investigate.

State Rails Spend $24,000,000 for the Years Improvements

More than $24,000,000 will have been spent during the current year by the railroads in improvements and betterments of their properties in Michigan. R. C. Vandercook, manager of the Michigan Railroads' Association, has announced. This sum, he said, represents only the outlays that are allocated to and come directly to serve Michigan.

Mr. Vandercook announced the various budgets which may be considered exclusively as of Michigan, as follows:

Michigan Central	$11,592,245
Grand Trunk	4,755,000
Pere Marquette	4,400,000
Minn., St. P. & S. S. Marie	1,095,000
Wabash	832,000
Pennsylvania	750,000
New York Central	625,000
Duluth, [illegible]ore & Atlantic	239,292
Detroit & Mackinac	94,000
Total	$24,383,137

"These several budgets should go far toward buoying up the labor market during those months when industries are tapering off in production and conditions tend toward dullness in employment," Mr. Vandercook said.

U. S. and State to Join in Study of Ore Problem

The United States bureau of mines, Michigan Geological survey and the Michigan College of Mines, Houghton, will co-operate with the Copper Research Advisory committee, recently formed at the Copper conference at Houghton, in the study of various problems of the copper industry in the Michigan district.

In the matter of magnetic dip needle tests, it is suggested that this method may prove of value in tracing a vein where there is a heavy overburden, using a possible magnetic lode nearer surface to locate the presence of faults and indicate the trend of the ore body. It is believed that no direct method of finding new copper deposits can be devised through this means, but that the collection of all data possible will prove of great benefit.

Use of Marl on Farms of Newaygo Spreads

Never before in the history of Newaygo county has there been such a widespread interest in the use of marl as a soil corrective. Enough marl to cover 12,000 acres of ground has been spread this year. Farmers of the county have found that they have in their midst an almost inexhaustible supply of this useful material.

Marl is made up of the remains of shells of marine animals mixed more or less with vegetable matter. The marl found in Newaygo county is remarkably pure, running as high as 99 per cent lime content. It occurs in virtually all parts of the county, in all the lakes, many of the swamps and low grounds and some of the higher grounds. While in most places it is either submerged or kept saturated as in the swamps, it occasionally occurs in a dry state. On the farm of Koos Karnemaat five miles south of Fremont is one of these dry "mines."

Mountain Trout Are Tested in State Water

Another experiment in fish planting in Michigan waters is under way. The state department of conservation has purchased 200,000 mountain trout for planting. The variety is also known as the cut-throat trout.

The type thrives in the western states but has never been introduced into Michigan waters. If the species thrives in Michigan waters, more will be purchased and planted, according to A. F. Westerman, director of the bureau of hactheries of the department.

During the past week trout planting has been going on from two lower peninsula stations and one in the upper peninsula. The lower peninsula stations are at Wolverine and Marjetta and the upper peninsula station is at Sault Ste. Marie.

State Land Sale Is Opposed by John Baird

John Baird, director of the State Department of Conservation has pledged his support to the efforts of western Michigan sportsmen to prevent the destruction of the Pere Marquette river, a popular trout stream, by hydro-electric development promoters.

Mr. Baird, who was reported a few days ago as favoring the sale of state lands to the promoters because they promised to give to the state all fishing rights in the waters, declared before a conference of representatives of organizations interested in preservation of Michigan natural resources that he would oppose the sale of the lands and promised to become a member of any group which would buy the property from the state and turn it over as a state park. It was explained the state may be forced to sell the property.

State's Largest Lake is Haven of Sportsmen

Houghton Lake, Michigan's largest inland basin, where years ago Indians grouped and hunted in the surrounding forests, is a haven this season for fishermen and vacationists.

Two good roads have supplanted the Indian trail that was the link between Detroit and this primitive resort more than a generation ago. What was a three or four-day journey has been reduced by improved roadways to a one-day pleasure jaunt.

The choice of motorways includes a route by way of M-10, M-20 and M-18, while the other takes the motorist over M-10, M-18 and M-14.

State Fair Buildings Damaged by Flames

Two wooden buldings were badly damaged by fire at the Michigan State Fair grounds at Detroit, causing a loss estimated at several thousand dollars. The blaze had made such headway that upon arrival of the first fire companies a second alarm was sounded.

Dean of Thumb Printers Is Dead at Port Huron

"30" has been written on the roster of life for Frederick C. Adams, 74 years old, dean of printers in Port Huron and the Thumb district. Death was caused by heart trouble. Adams was born in Ingersoll, Ont., Feb. 25, 1852. He learned the printer's trade in the shop of Buffington & Howe, publishers of the Port Huron Press. He continued his association with the Press until it was absorbed by the Port Huron Times. Then he went with the Riverside Printing company, with which he remained until 1921 as secretary and manager, when he resigned to become manager of the printing department of the Women's Benefit Association.

One of Trio in Robbery of Bank Pleads Guilty

Charles Beranek, one of the trio of youths who held up the Romulus bank several weeks ago and were captured by a posse of armed citizens, appeared before Judg Guy A. Miller in Detroit and changed his plea to guilty. He had previously pleaded not guilty before L. Eugene Sharp, justice of the peace.

Beranek's two bandit companions, Fred Lux and Delmar Sanders, pleaded guilty and are in the Wayne county jail awaiting sentence.

Life Guard Saved From Mob When Boy Drows

The neglect of a life guard at Tashmoo Park, in St. Clair river, to resuce a Detroit youth from drowning nearly cost the guard his life at the hands of an angry mob and resulted in his incarceration in the Port Huron jail while county officials investigated the death of Alex Chustorosh, 20 years old.

William Woodlay, 43, the guard, was later released and returned to his home at Buffalo, N. Y. Woodlay explained that he at first thought Chustrrosh was trying to "fool" him by sinking to the bottom and then when he realled he was drowning, Woodlay "lost his head."

Good news is no good unless you can tell it to somebody.

Men of mature years have much to be thankful for because of the failure of the majority of their youthful plans.

Daughter Accused By Mother of Theft; Faces Court July 19

Judge Edward J. Jeffries in the Detroit court has released Mrs. Martha Wood, 46, of Dexter, Mich., on her personal recognizance for examination July 19, when Mrs. Wood explained the $1,000 larceny charge of which she was arrested at behest of her aged mother, Mrs. Gusta Hammel, of Detroit.

Mrs. Wood explained that she cared for her mother last winter, at Dexter, while Mrs. Hammel was ill. Mrs. Hammel insisted, she said, on giving her $1,000, but because she was unwilling to take advantage of her mother's condition, she returned the money and got a receipt which she displayed in court.

Mrs. Wood has four children and 10 grandchildren.

Once Mecca of Town's Gossips Now Is in Ruins

Eight miles northeast of Hesperia are the remains of what was once a flourishing country store and postoffice called Cole Creek. David J. Maynard, the only postmaster the office ever had, still owns and lives on the farm, but the building has been relegated to the scrap heap.

In the days before rural free delivery, the automobile, and good roads, the country store and postoffice flourished. Every little country community had its combination store and mail distributing center, which also served as a community club. There it was that the farmers and lumbermen came in the evening to get the mail and to pass the gossip of the countryside. Here, humped up on cracker barrels and soap boxes, the oracles of the community "swapped" yarns of big game hunts, of dangerous days on the rivers, breaking rollways, of being chased by wild animals on the old logging trails, of the marvelous days' work swinging the cradle or pitching hay, and of the thousand and one current happenings.

Feathered Songsters Are Good Fly Catchers

Most interesting of flycatchers are the phoebe and pewee, both of which summer throughout Michigan.

It is rather difficult to distinguish the two species other than by the song although the phoebe is a little larger and differs slightly in coloring. Furthermore, the phoebe has the habit of nervously dropping its tail. The pewee has a more pronounced topknot.

With analogous habits, and indulging in the same food, the pewee arrives about six weeks later than the phoebe, who, frequently has family cares before cousin pewee appears in our northern states. Pewee is usually found in dry woods and orchards, while the phoebe is always associated wih old bridges and babbling brooks.

Houghton Athlete Is Found Hanged by Belt

The body of Enoch "Nick" Henderson, 16 years old, Houghton high school athlete, who disappeared from his home two weeks ago, was found hanging in a clump of bushes not more than 200 feet from the home. The boy usel his trousers belt, slipping it through the buckle to form a noose and tying the other end to the limb of a small tree. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Henderson. The boy's father is a well known mining man and formerly was superintendent of the Franklin mine near Houghton.

Woman Bit Him on Leg Is Detroit Cop's Complaint

A dog bite is bad enough, but a Detroit policeman is all up in the air, he says, because a woman bit him in the leg.

Mrs. Louise Stevens, 39 years old, was arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace. She fought with Patrolman Frank Daggett, who was called to quiet her. Patrolman Daggett said Mrs. Stevens bit him on the left leg.

U. S. Aids Michigan in War on Forest Fires

For the purpose of determining more accurately what constitutes bad forest fire weather, and to work out reliable methods of predicting such weather far enough in advance that reliable warnings may be sen out in time to prevent heavy damage, a special fire-weather warning service has been organized for Michigan by the weather bureau of the United States department of agriculture.

This service will be conducted in co-operation with the forest service of the department and various state and private agencies and associations. It will enable protective agencies to increase their vigilance and make advance preparations for mobilizing fire fighters and supplies, and will give woods workers, campers and travelers opportunity to take extra precautions with fire in the woods, according to the authorities in charge.

Retired Farmer, 90, Kept Young by Windmills

John Williston, a retired farmer, living at Lakeside, Mich., nearing his ninetieth year, believes that the only way to keep young and active is to take up a hobby that he can fall back upon when he quits business. And John has developed a hobby for windmills and spends most all of his waking time constructing the curiosities that fill the front yard about his little home, and which cause motorists traveling off the state road to stop and wonder.

He has about 200 windmills turning and twisting with every breeze and giving forth a musical murmur that is pleasant to hear.

Student and Instructor Injured in Plane Fall

An instructor and a student aviator are in a serious condition in a Detroit hospital as a result of their airplane falling 300 feet in a tail-spin near the Overcashier Flying field at Southfield avenue and the Seven-and-a-Half Mile road, Wayne county.

The student, Conrad Schaffer, 28 years old, has both legs and his left arm broken, and bruises. The instructor, Matthew Bonser, 29 years old, suffered concussion of the brain and cuts on the face.

Witnesses said Schaffer apparently lost control of the plane. They said they saw Bonser, in the rear seat, trying to right the plane as it fell.

Speaking before Pontiac Service clubs, Dr. Lynn Harold Hough of Detroit urged development of a world market so that every man in the world would be regarded as a possible customer for American manufacturers and none as a possible foe.

Detroit Found Full of Vice in Long Survey

That Detroit has a red light district containing 570 disorderly houses, and that vice conditions there are the wrost in the country, is the substance of a report following a three months' survey conducted here privately and financed by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The report, which concludes that some constructive policy is necessary to combat conditions, is sponsored by the American Social Hygiene association.

The report, in part, states:

"Detroit ranks as the blackest, vilest city—barring none—in the United States as far as vice is concerned. This is not an opinion but the relation of unquestioned facts."

Dog With Injured Leg Hobbles Into Hosital

To teach a dog tricks, you must know more than the dog.—Training Rule No. 20.

If the rule mentioned were applied to "Mac," a mongrel pup, the average Detroiter wouldn't be able to teach him many tricks.

The dog proved that point when he limped his way into the Detroit Receiving hospital after having suffered a broken fore leg in an accident. "Mac" had been much in the vicinity of the hospital, and no doubt had observed injured persons being taken into the building.

Conductor Falls from Bus, Lands on His Feet

Matthew Toomey, Detroit Motorbus company conductor, took a headlong dive from the top of his bus to the pavement, landing unhurt on his feet after a somersault in the air.

Toomey was collecting fares on the bus top when a dangling guy wire caught him under the chin and lifted him into the air and over the bus railing.

Passengers said Toomey turned a perfect somersault in the air and landed on his feet.

One-Armed Golfer at Pontiac, "Holes in One"

Probably no other golfer in the country holds the unique distinction that belongs to W. C. Rohrmoser of Detroit, vice president and treasurer of the Interstate Plasterers' Association. Playing the Duck Lake course at Pontiac, the Detroiter, who has only one arm, sank his tee shot on the 160-yard eighth for a hole in one. Incidentally he turned in a card of 43 on a par 35 course. Rohrmoser has been playing for some time despite the handicap of having one arm off at the shoulder.

Canary seed alone does not furnish a balanced feed for canaries, but in combination with hemp and summer rape it forms a good ration. Much of the rape seed put up and sold in cartons is of a kind that even wild birds do not eat because of its pungent and bitter flavor, says the United States Department of Agriculture, but all birds relish the taste of true summer rape.

A negro from Chicago accompanied by his wife and mother, and driving a Studebaker touring car, collided with a concrete abutment on the highway east of town near the Ross Delamater farm early Sunday morning with the result that the front frame was bent nearly double and the front axle bent to S shape, radiator and headlights demolished. It seems the party left Chicago Saturday evening en route for Detroit to spend the 4th. After driving all night, the driver fell asleep which caused the accident. The occupants of the back seat were thrown against the robe rail with sufficient force to bend it and dent the iron back of the seat. The windshield was smashed to bits. However, no one was injured. Ray Walters was called to tow in the wrecked Studebaker which is now awaiting repairs in his garage. The party went to Jonesville to resume their journey by rail. Driver stated he was driving quite slowly, but results do not bear out the story.

Inside of The Bomb Outrage at Muskegon

From the "State Trooper" we glean some particulars concerning the recent bomb scrape at Muskegon in which a father, daughter and her fiancee were killed. August Kurbaech hotel proprietor of Blue Lake and popular supervisor of the township, had been in politics for same time and of course, made some enemies. His prettydaughter Jeanette, 18 years of age, was to be married the next day to William Franke and the three stood in the barroom of the hotel examining a package from the postoffice that they supposed contained a wedding present. Upon opening the package a terrific explosion shook the building wrecking its interior killing the three instantly. Bits of iron flew into the victims and the bomb evidently contained a high explosive.

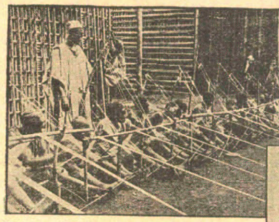
Newspaper propaganda was sown broadcast over Michigan but local officials were not able to do the cleaning up and State Police got on the job. One Asa Bartlett a constable and blacksmith was traced and upon being put under pressure, confessed that he made the bomb and sent it. The police found plenty of clues around his shop to prove the story.

The basis of the quarrel goes back several years and politics played a role. Kurbaech was a Catholic and Bartlett a KuKluxer, two elements that won't mix, which accounts for some of the bitterness between them. While the State Police do not state all the facts it goes without saying that either of the factions would stoop to the dirtiest deals to win.

KuKluxism in that part of Michigan has received a set-back and Bartlett was sent to Marquette for life, but of course propaganda will be set in motion for a pardon and in due season he'll get out unless things change. He ought to be hung or any other dissolute character who joins an organization to commit murder for political or fraternal reasons.

The Wool Industry in South Africa

(Letter from E. S. Bartlett, Bloemfontein, O. F. S., Africa)



© Underwood & Underwood
Weaving woolens with primitive looms in Africa. Note the Overseers.

Four of a kind. Kaffir children.

The Union of South Africa is rightly classed among the great wool producing countries of the world. Climatic conditions there are admirably adapted to the breeding and raising of the Merino type of sheep with a strong, staple wool.

A large part of this country is suitable only for the raising of sheep, and the government is making progressive and intelligent efforts to improve both the sheep and the manner of preparing the wool for market.

Jackals being a strong menace in South Africa, long-time government loans are extended to sheep owners for the erection of jackal-proof fencing. Government sheep experts are maintained permanently in alloted districts so that their services and advice may be assured at a nominal fee.

The mutton sheep of South Africa is the fat-tailed, black headed Cape—a non-wooled sheep. As no cross-breeding for mutton lambs is done, the wools are purely Merino in character.

Progress in this South African industry is particularly noticeable in the harvesting. Despite the fact that Kaffir labor can be secured at the equivalent of $3.50 American, per month, there is a trend towards the modern shearing machine as against the age-old hand blades, which, even in America, have not been discarded by many otherwise entirely progressive wool raisers.

A study of this fact, however, readily reveals the reason for it. While there is a first cost for the machine, the unskilled black adapts himself to its use much more readily than to the hand blades, and soon does a remarkably smooth job of shearing with the machine.

Once adapted to the use of the machine, its economic value is demonstrated in the materially greater number of sheep shorn daily, t[illegible]ter market value of the wool, [illegible]er maimed sheep, and not least important, the additional 5% to 12% more wool obtained with the machine over and above the amount of wool secured with the hand blades. As a consequence, the machine resolves itself into a small investment with certain and big returns.

Steadily, the science of wool-marketing in South Africa is fast approaching the scientific efficiency of the Australian marketing plan, which is, without doubt, the most practical and efficient in existence today.

Considering that the four provinces, Natal, Transvaal, Orange Free State, and Cape Province, which comprise the Union of South Africa, have 20,000 square miles less of territory than Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming combined, it is surprising to note that they contain two and one half times as many sheep as our five states named.

This alone, makes that country a strong contender for future leadership in the wool industry. It is interesting to note however, that the great bulk of foreign progressiveness is due to American initiative, American implements, and machinery and American ingenuity. The South African wool industry holds true to this in that American methods and American machinery are destined to take a large and important place in the economic progress of the far distant Union of South Africa.

Business was marching on into the Taylor Sub-divisions, of which none have been more popular than the Brightmoor-Woodworth.

Here you find highest restrictions ideal location; big possibilities; It makes us friends every time we sell a lot. It won't cost a cent to look our properties over. Seeing generally means buying.

Harvey Shull Passed Away

Harvey L. Shull, third son of Jesse and Elizabeth Shull, was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, November 11th, 1873, and departed this life to the lands beyond July 10th, 1926, in Hillsdale hospital aged 52 years, 7 months and 29 days, leaving his mother, four brothers, Vern, of Elkhart Indiana; Willis at home; Frank and Carlos of Hillsdale county; one sister, Mrs. Maude Boyer of Hillsdale; three half brothers, Charles Hawk at home, Melvin Shull of Coldwater; Gilbert Shull of West Liberty, Ohio; two half sisters, Mrs. A. F. Scott of Warsaw, Indiana; Mrs. Peter Burgner of Constantine, Mich., and a host of nephews, nieces and friends to mourn their loss.

Dearest Brother, thou hast left us;
Here our loss we deeply feel
But 'tis God who hast bereft us;
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yonder in the graveyard gently;
Rests the form we loved so well
But we look to Heaven and Glory;
Where there will be no farewell,

Brother dearest, thou hast left us;
Lonely in this world to roam,
We may truly ask the question,
What is home since thou art gone?

Farewell Brother, 'till we meet thee;
In thy Heavenly home above;
There to sing God's praises with thee
In the land of joy and love.

Funeral services were conducted at the late home Tuesday July 13, 1926 at 2:00 p. m. Rev. Virgil Hunt of the North Adams Congregational church officiated, and interment was in the North Adams cemetery.

Pall bearers were the five brothers, Vern, Willis, Frank, Melvin, Carlos and one brother-in-law Calvin Boyer.

MICHIGAN LEADS IN WAR ON DOPE

Michigan is girding her loins to combat what State authorities agree is the most serious social and economical problem that has faced the State — narcotic drug addiction. An intensive educational and hospitalization campaign has been launched by the Narcotic ducational AssociaEtion of Michigan, which ultimately will lead to the establishment of a $250,000 farm-hospital for the cure and rehabilitation of addicts.

This state is the first in the union to make a concentrated effort of this kind for the treatment of dope addicts and the pioneer movement here is being watched by health and law officers throughout the country. The advisory committee contains the names of many prominent Detroiters and state officers, including Alan G. Straight, commissioner of public safety, and Dr. Richard M. Olin, state health commissioner.

Six cities—Lansing, Bay City, Flint, Highland Park, Jackson and Monroe—already have pledged their support and agreed to aid in raising the $250,000 fund in a state-wide campaign July 14 to 23.

The Michigan association already has purchased a 320-acre farm, near Capac, where the hospital is to be built.

Commissioner Olin declares there are 20,000 dope addicts in Michigan, half of them in Detroit. Statistics prepared by the association show the average age of these addicts is 22 years and that a large per cent of them are boys and girls under 21. National authorities say that there are now 1,000,000 addicts in this country and that 1,000 more join this army of unfortunates daily.

Swimming Coyote Upsets Belief of Old Time Hunters

There has been a belief in certain circles that water will stop a wolf or coyote, that they refuse to take the plunge when railing heir prey and will turn tail, abandoning the chase, when they reach the shores of a lake or stream.

This doesn't hold true of the Michigan coyote, judging by the story brought in by Lighthouse Tender Amaranth at Houghton.

The crew of the Amaranth, the first vessel to enter the Portage Lake canal his year, reports that while steaming through to Houghton from Lake Superior, Captain G. Gunderson sighted what he though was a dog swimming across the canal and slowed up the vessel to effect a rescue. Several members of the crew were about to lower a boat when the first mate recognized the animal as a coyote. Grabbing a rifle he killed it the first shot, brought the carcass to Houghton and exhibited it in refutation of the theory ha coyotes won't take to water.

House Burns Again

For the second time within a year, Mrs. Melbert Donnelly, living at Ionia, has lost all her household goods by fire. Mrs. Donnelly rescued her infant baby from the flames just in the nick of time. In the first fire she lost both the household goods and the home, located on the Murphy farm near Lyons.

Love of Photography Art Leads to Arrest of Two Postal Clerks

Walter Cinser, 30, and John P. Hynes, Detroit postal clerks, pleaded guilty of robbing the mails when arraigned before United States Commissioner J. Stanley Hurd. They were held on $1,000 bond.

The arrests followed an investigation by postal inspectors at the sub station where the men worked. A number of valuable parcels disappeared. A stolen camera led to the arrests.

Court Bars Girl Ringing Bells and Hurling Bricks

The alleged brick tossing and bell ringing tactics of Virginia Gilin must stop at once if the injunction holds good that Judge Harry J. Dingeman of the Detroit circuit court granted to Marie Versaillie.

Miss Versaillie charged in her petition that her peace of mind has been so disordered in the past two months by bricks crashing into her house through the windows and by the ringing of telephone and door bells that she can no longer sleep. Two months ago the first midnight brick arrived via the front window. When she ran to look out, she said, the person of Miss Gilin was evident vanishing around the corner.

Since then, Miss Versaillie told the court, her life has been one brick and telephone call after another.

Fawn Found Starving; Dogs Chased Mother

A spotted fawn about three weeks old was found in Meade township, five miles east of Ludington, by Joseph Lemmer. The creature was nearly starved, its mother having been chased away by dogs. Game Warden Elms sent it to the state game farm at Mason. It probably will be sent to the state forest near Grayling when it is old enough to forage for itself.

Late Season Delays Spawning by Lake Fish

Hundreds of anglers, hoping for their early catches of perch and bluegills, have been disappointed this year by reason of the fact that spawning, usually completed by this time, has not begun. The beds have been winnowed; but the fish, almost bursting with eggs, are still in deep water because of the lateness of the season.

During the past week the lakes have been thoroughly fished, but with meager results.

Church, Last Landmark of Old Community, Goes

With the razing of the old Methodist church at Ashland Corners, four miles southwest of Grant, passes the last of the old landmarks of that community.

Ashland Corners dates back to the 50's. The first settlers carried in their provisions from Grand Rapids, 30 miles distant. Later a trading post was established at Bridgeton, seven miles away.

GEMS RETURNED TO ART INSTITUTE

The $12,000 Stearns collection of jewels, stolen a year ago from the Detroit Institute of rAt, have been found in the Sarna, Ont., home of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart A. oward, wealthy parents of oward PaxtonH, the youthful art student who has confessed also that he stole the $75,000 Persian rug from the institute. The rug was a gift of Edsel Ford.

oward rHelated with a wistful, whispering tone how he walked along East Jefferson avenue, Detroit, with the rug tucked under his arm, early morning pedestrians passing him on both sides, until a taxicab picked him up. Until the confession it was thought Patrolman William Wertz's chance arrival on the Hastings street side of the Institute had frightened Howard out of the building. Instead the lad had been gone from the Institute a half hour when Patrolman Wertz discovered the rope dangling from a third story window and the $28,000 Florentine bust on the sidewalk.

The confession states that William Thackeray, 22, was to have met Howard with an automobile beneath the Institute window at 3 o'clock the morning of the robbery. Thackeray failed to appear, so Howard decided to flee with the rug, the only article he was physically able to carry away.

Sheriff, Two Deputies Are Held in Liquor Case

Sheriff Lloyd Cleveland, of Dickinson county, and two deputies, Leonard Young and Albert Freeman, were arrested charged with trying to intimidate a government witness.

The arrest of the sheriff and deputies is said to be the outgrowth of the arraignment a short time ago at Marquette of Tony Bianchetti, alleged Iron Mountain liquor law violator. Bianchetti was released following his arraignment.

Sheriff Cleveland, Young and Freeman, are being held on $10,000 bond each at the Marquette county jail.

City Ask to Put Ban On Dump Scavangers

The municipal service department of Grand Rapids has asked the city commission for enactment of an ordinance to prevent any person, except authorized city employes, to remove anything from the city's dumps. The inspectors of the municipal dumps, part of whose compensation is the right to salvage anything which is saleable, have complained that their revenue from this source has been curtailed because dump scavangers steal much that is of value.

Saginaw Man Named By U. S. to London Post

William L. Cooper, of Saginaw, has been appointed commercial attache of the department of commerce at London. The post is considered the most important in the foreign service.

Cooper was born in Saginaw. He was educated in the grade and high schools there and was graduated from the University of Michigan with a degree in mechanical engineering.

New Elk Herd Haven Is State Game Refuge

Five sections of land, 3,200 acres, in the center of Alpena State Forest, lying west of Alpena, have been declared a state game refuge in which all hunting and trapping is forbidden. This action was taken because this reserve harbors part of the recently introduced elk herd and conservation officials do not want to chance these animals being mistaken for deer during the open season.

White Blackbirds Are Freaks in Washtenaw

The traditional white blackbird has been discovered in Washtenaw county; ni fact, two of them. Out of a brood of four blackbirds recently hatched, two snow-white albinos with pink eyes graced the nest. There isn't a dark feather in either of the freak birds. True albinos in blackbirds is rare—as rare as the white crow.

126-Pound Calf Born On Farm Near Garden

What is believed to be the largest calf ever born in Michigan, and possibly in the United States, has begun his career on the farm of James Watchorn, near Garden, Mich. He weighed 126 pounds two days after bird. The largest calf on previous record weighed 120 pounds at birth.

Riches Fail to Alter Life of Farmer After Long Legal Battle

Just a retired farmer one day and a millionaire the next is not going to change the life of E. Root Fitch, well known Dowagiac resident, it was stated after it was announced that he was heir to $1,235,722, a third of the estate of the late Mary Croxson of Brooklyn, who died over a year ago leaving no will.

"hy should I change my mode of living now?" asked the 65-year-old man. "My home is here and so are my friends. No, I expect to live right here as I have done in the past."

This same sentiment is expressed by the only son, Robert Fitch.

Following three long and bitter fights with cousins of the late James Croyson, who died in the West Indies fifty years ago, a settlement was made with the plaintiffs and the estate decision is now effected, following the filing of an appraisal in surrogate court, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Potato Shipments In State Exceed 14,000 Carloads

Michigan's potato shipments for the season will total more than 14,000 carloads, it was apparent this week, as the supply bega nto dwindle. Only a few hundred cars remain, but the total so far is 13,933 carloads, figures show.

The potato grower of Michigan has realized a better profit this year on his crop than ever before, bulletins of the co-operative associations indicate. Farmers have been edvised intelligently how and when to market their produce, with the result that the market has not been flooded, and the price, consequently, has fluctuated little.

Firemen of State In Convention at Caro

State firemen held their annual convention at Caro, July 13, 13, and 15. Besides exhibitions of modern fire fighting equipment several persons, including James Niven of Saginaw, Dr. William T. Shaw of the state accident board, and R. C. Longhead of the Michigan inspection bureau, were speakers.

$1,108,851 Cash In State Treasury

The state general fund showed a cash balance on hand, less warrants outstanding, of $1,108,851 as of July 1, the end of the fiscal year, according to a report issued by the state accounting division.

The general balance fund sheet shows an excess of $2,300,332.

At the end of May, 1925, the excess of assets over liabilities was less than half as much, amountnig to $991,118, the report states.

Montana Grayling Is Adaptable to Michigan

"There is no good reason why the Montana grayling should not do well in Michigan trout waters," says Fred Westerman, superintendent of Michigan fish hatcheries. "We recently planted about 1,000,000 small fry in the headwaters of the Muskegon, Manistee, Thunder Bay and Au Sable rivers, and in Silver Lead Lake in the Upper Peninsula, and indications are that they are donig well."

A back porch romance of two months ended in a cell in Detroit police headquarters for James Galba, 20 years old, and his 16-year-old bride, Mrs. Margaret Snell Galba.

The blissful couple might have continued to exist in their Arcadian happiness had not Margaret's praents, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Snell, objected to such an early marriage and had not the Galba's attempted their residence right next door to the bride's parents.

Cottages Along Lakes Are Periled By Forest Flames

Several forest fires in Clare county, most of them along the Ann Arbor railroad tracks and evidently set by the sparks from the locomotives, are assuming dangerous proportions.

Several unoccupied buildings north of Lake George have been destroyed and cottages at some of the other lakes have been threatened.

Rains this spring have done more to keep down fires in Michigan woods than the educational campaign. For two months now frequent rains have visited western and northern Michigan and as a result the fire loss this year has been the lowest in years.

The educational campaign is doing much to aid in the fire prevention work. Yet, frequently rains do more good, and it is during the long, dry spells that serious fires gain headway.

Muskegon county, through its conservation officers, is progressing in preventing forest fires. Several arrests have been made of persons starting fires without permits.

DETROIT TO GET LARGEST BUILDING

Construction of the world's tallest building, which will ascend 81 stories above the street level at Washington boulevard, State street and Park place, Detroit, has been started with the razing of several landmarks that have occupied the site for many years.

The Book Tower, as it will be known, will be 873 feet high, nearly 100 feet taller than the Woolworth building in New York, and comprise 23 more floors.

Other tall structures which come in the class of the new Book Tower, are: the Metropolitan Life building, 702 feet; Singer building, 612 feet; Municipal building, 560 feet; and the Banker's Trust building, 539 feet, all of which are located in New York city.

The only structure in the world which exceeds the tower in height is the Eiffel Tower, in Paris, 999 feet high, and this is not a building, but a steel frame.

Washington monument in Washington rises 555 feet.

Ann Arbor Plans 12 Mile Park Along Huron River Bank

A park system extending 12 miles along the Huron river between Dexter and Geddes, and making Ann Arbor the center of one of the most elaborate and complete boulevard developments in the country, will be launched htis fall if plans of Mayor Robert A. Campbel, of Ann Arbor, are carried to completion.

The park system, which will begin in the fall, according to Mayor Campbell's plans, includes a wide drive along each side of the Huron river. About it would be wooded scenery that exists there, together with playgrounds, tennis courts, baseball fields, swimming pools, golf courses and picnic grounds.

Active co-operation of the University of Michigan in forming ths park system is hinted n the preliminary announcement, wth the appointment of Dr. Clarence C. Little, president of the university, to the committee.

"What to wear," is the title of a new book. A companion volume entitled "How to Procure It" would fill a long-felt want.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does no and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer.

"Present that at the gate to the watchman," he said. "He will get you in touch with Hinckley. The car is yours for the day."

He waved aside all thanks but he left Caleb pondering why he, with no other medium than Baxter's introduction and the fact that he had been in the same war with Jack Cox, and was a civil engineer with a professed leaning toward water development, should be tendered so many courtesies by this man of affairs. Western hospitality could not suffice for this. He surmised that Cox might be in special need of engineers but such a premise was only barely probable. He found Cox surveying him with shrewd eyes in which a glint of something, that might be either kindliness or humor, shone.

"Anything you'd like to ask me?" he queried. "I shan't sign anything until I come back after lunch, Harry," he said, in dismissal of the secretary. Caleb took the question as a clever method of examination. His inquiries would be apt to show his caliber in short order.

"I gathered, from what your son told me," he said, "and from what I heard of the talk at the table last night, that Golden faced, or was about to face, a water shortage that you considered prejudicial to the progress of the city. Is that so?"

Cox nodded, took a box of cigars from his desk drawer, handed it to Caleb, chose one himself, passed the matches and smoked for a few puffs before he answered.

"There is no mystery about it. It is an unpleasant fact. You are going to see the works tomorrow. I need not tell you that water is the life-blood of a city. It runs in its mains, in its flushing system, as it does through the arteries and veins of a body. Overbuild, without water, and you have atrophy, as you cannot expect the blood that is sufficient for a child to sustain the body of a full-grown man. We know today exactly how many gallons per capita we must figure on for a modern city with domestic, civic and manufacturing supply. The number of gallons in our reservoirs, divided by that ratio, marks the present limits of Golden's population, of its progress. And that limit is almost reached.

"We cannot get more watershed. To dig more wells—there are many artesian wells in the city—would only diminish present flows. Distillation is not practical. Already the lower peninsula is badly off for water. We need a Moses to strike the rocks for us. Perhaps he may come out of the East," he ended, the glint in his eyes plainly a twinkle now. "Anyway, Mr. Warner, there is the situation. There is a fortune for the man who can find a solution for the present shortage. We have some schemes in view but the cost prohibits them. The water supply must be pure as well as plentiful. Filtration alone is a serious problem.

"As to yourself? I should be only too glad to say we could use you in such development of Golden's water but none is forward. Would you care to connect yourself with a power company? One is now on paper—blue prints and stock, with the latter almost subscribed. It will take you up in the mountains. The berth will be open within a few weeks. I can arrange it for you."

"You know nothing of my qualifications," said Caleb. Cox smiled.

"I'll take a chance on my own judgment," he said dryly. "You won't last long if you are incompetent. And you don't appear that. The place is at Beaver Lake, in Stanislaus county. You'll be roughing it for accommodations, of course. But it'll be good practice in western methods. I fancy you'll find them different from eastern. Different type of labor, for one thing."

Caleb did not immediately fill the pause. He had made up his mind to study the Golden proposition. It did not seem possible that he should discover something that Cox and his experts had overlooked on their own ground but that nebulous thought was still persistent.

"Thank you, I shall be glad to consider it," he said finally. "Do you wish immediate acceptance?"

"Make up your mind before the first of the month."

There were sixteen days between then and the first of the next month. Time enough, Caleb thought, to do something with his theory, prove or discard it.

They walked up together to the Altruists. Caleb thought that Baxter might be there. Instead, there was a message to call up the apartment house.

"Want to see you, Cal," said Baxter. "If you haven't anything on that's important come for a spin with me. I know a little roadhouse over the San Mateo line where we can get some good chow."

As they motored Baxter commented on Cox's attitude.

"You don't owe me anything," he said. "Get that out of your head, for it is exactly what Cox meant to put into it. About the Beaver Lake job, Cox is one of those divided interests that have come together. Each side owned rights they wouldn't sell. I got to know about it over a real estate deal of my own—that didn't come off. Can't you see that it will be to Cox's advantage to have a man up there of his own choosing, on whose reports he can absolutely rely? That's why he's been nice to you—nothing much out of the way, at that. It's what you'd call using the personal element, I suppose."

Caleb was convinced that Baxter had something on his mind concerning his own affairs but he did not refer to them until the excellent lunch was finished.

"I'm in a mess, Cal," he said when the waiter was tipped and dismissed.

"Anything I can do, Ted?"

"I don't know. I want to talk it over. It's a girl."

The statement was almost unnecessary to Caleb but he said nothing.

"The 'peach' is turning out to be a citron. She's nice enough and a good sport and I believe she's fond of me. She says she is," he went on moodily. "And I've got to take her word for it. She wants me to marry her. And I can't. I won't. Whether it's the square thing to do or not. It wouldn't be the square thing. We'd be fighting in a month. We're miles apart in most things. You know, Cal."

"She thinks you have to marry her?"

"So she says. I can't disprove it. I'm not saying she lies. I might buy her off. I haven't got the money. She won't listen to reason—about the 'kid.'"

"It seems to me that's up to her. How long have you known her, Ted?"

"Little over two months. Her picture's on my bureau. In one of the silver frames. Just put it there. Oh, h—l!" He threw away his unsmoked cigar.

"What do you want me to do? See her? I—"

"No, that wouldn't do any good. But, we had a bit of a row. I suppose I didn't take the news gracefully. She swears I don't love her. Perhaps she doesn't altogether believe that—but she might. It's the truth, when you come right down to brass tacks. I suppose I'm a mucker but I honestly believe I'd be a worse one if I married her."

"Well?"

"She talked about going away—till it was over with. She's a crackerjack of a stenographer. She can earn her own living anywhere when she's not handicapped. I think I could fix things so she would go, if I could raise the money to look out for her while she goes through with the thing. She's set to do that," he added gloomily. "Tried to reason with her but it was no go.

"It would take a couple of thousand dollars," he went on, talking more rapidly. "I've got a deal on. I've got some parties who want to buy land for a little colony. A bona-fide proposition and I'm handling it direct. I should make at least twenty thousand out of the deal. It's ripe. Got to come off pretty soon. But, I'm stumped as usual. You know that. What the mater sends just sees me through. I may have to raise some for an option. Could you let me have the two thousand, Cal? I don't know where else to go and I don't want to go shouting this thing about all over the shop."

"I've got just eleven hundred dollars in the bank here," said Caleb slowly. "If I take up Cox's proposition I'll not need more than two hundred of that to carry me over till the first pay check. I have a house back East I can sell. The deal might take a week or so. They take their time there to pass deeds. But. . . ."

Baxter groaned, his head in his hands.

"It's got to be two thousand, I'm afraid. You see if she goes away she'd be sore at me. I'd have to make her sore and she'd want the whole thing. And I won't have you selling your house. It wouldn't do any good. She'll change her mind inside of two weeks. It isn't so d—d imminent. She won't have to quit her job for a bit. At a pinch I'll make the mater come through. For the honor of the family!"

He laughed sarcastically.

"If she can chip off a hunk of the principal for herself once in a while, she can do it for me—once. The money was meant for me eventually. And, if it's put right up to her, she'll handle the girl, too, rather than hinder her own matrimonial prospects, as a scandal would. Now let's take a run down to the duck club. I'm secretary and I've got to give the shack the overlook before the season opens."

Within the hour, tramping through the marshes to the shooting shack, he seemed to have forgotten his dilemma completely but one sentence, an epitome of Baxter's character, clung to Caleb. "Oh, I can stall along." He remembered, too, the hint of sullen stubbornness that had shadowed the girl's pouting lips.

CHAPTER V

Crystal Springs

Hinckley, head engineer of the Crystal Springs company, met the car at the outer gate of the property. He was a short, stout, but active man, with gold-rimmed spectacles over shrewd blue eyes about which spread a network of fine lines that spoke for humor and long habit of puckering under sun-glare. He reminded Caleb somehow of an apple, firm and glowing and sound.

They rolled swiftly on through a strange region and a beautiful one. Sometimes they skirted a hillside where chapparal, manzanita and kindred shrubs grew in a shoulder-high tangle that seemed too thick for anything less agile than a squirrel to explore. Beneath them flourished great ferns. Through them Caleb caught glimpses of lakes lying far below, bits of blue far deeper than the sky they mirrored and intensified.

They turned abruptly to their right where the road ran beside a purling stream and boughs knitted overhead. The descent was gradual and the car slid along noiselessly.

"Here's the brick dam, a bit primitive but a godsend to Golden in the old days," said Hinckley.

It was a beautiful sheet of water above the dam, set in the silence of a wooded canyon but they did not spend much time with it. Hinckley pointed directly across the water to a V-shaped gap in the opposing slopes.

"There's the big dam," he said. "I want you to notice the laterals, the earth dams that divide the lake into three. See anything funny about 'em?"

Caleb gazed earnestly. On each side of these dams was set a gatehouse. Their tops were roads with the sides fenced. And these roads were serpentine.

"Any reason for not building them straight from shoe to shore?" he asked. Hinckley emitted a satisfied sigh.

"Ah! They were built straight. The quake shifted 'em, twisted 'em, wrenched 'em, bent 'em—but it didn't break 'em. They're sound as ever."

Caleb looked his appreciation and bewilderment. Hinckley wrinkled his eyes.

"Clay cores, my boy. Clay cores. Elastic. Like so much rubber. They bend but never break."

"Did you anticipate an earthquake?" asked Caleb.

> With Baxter in a "mess" and Cox and Hinkley apparently friendly, the plot thickens. What next?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Calculation of Size of Statue of Apollo

The famous problem concerning the size of the colossal statue of Apollo on the island of Delos, which has worried so many savants, has finally been solved.

We are familiar with the Delos Apollo only in miniature, as represented on the Attic tetradrachm, an ancient Greek coin, where the god is shown holding the three Graces in his right hand.

At a recent meeting of the academy of inscriptions Theodore Reinach announced that he had calculated, with the aid of history as well as mathematics, the size of Apollo and the three Graces. This archaic colossus at Delos was the masterpiece, in gilded wood, of the sculptors Tectaois and Angelion who flourished between 550 and 530 B. C.

The three Graces, which were not grouped, but separated and erect, bore, respectively, the zyther, the double flute and the pipes of Pan. They stood in the palm of Apollo's right hand. In his left hand he carried a bow. The colossus and its three statues were destroyed by fire.

With the assistance of a Delian inscription which mentioned the weight of the gold crowns designed for the god and the Graces, M. Reinach estimated the relative heights of the figures as eight meters for the Apollo and one meter eighty centimeters for each of the Graces.—From Le Figaro Hebdomadaire, Paris. Translated for the Kansas City Star.

Insurance Method

Marine insurance is determined on an 80 per cent average loss. It exempts an insurance company from the payment of any partial loss or particular average insurance which exceeds a certain per cent of the value of the property. The particular average clause is sometimes applied to the value of each parcel or package or series of parcels and packages, according to invoice numbers. The differences between "With particular average" and "Free from particular average" is that the former has a particular average and the latter has not.

Can't Hurry Slow Thinker

Bright people must learn to be tolerant and patient with slower people, says the American Magazine. Failure to recognize this often gets a foreman into trouble with his men. Naturally, the foreman is likely to be brighter than those under him. And if he can't be tolerant with their slowness he is in for trouble. Trying to hurry naturally slow people is a foolish process. It hurts and irritates.

The duller a man is mentally, the less capacity he has to hurry. He can't hurry. You will never make a foreman or executive unless you are able to learn when your men are going at their best natural speed. If you push them beyond their limit—not your limit, but theirs—there is going to be a break.

Testimony by Telephone

Recently, testimony was taken by telephone in an American court. One of the witnesses for the commonwealth in an automobile accident case, had just returned home after being a patient in a hospital and was unable to attend court. He was called by telephone, the oath administered and his testimony transmitted and recorded by the court stenographer.

POULTRY FACTS

QUALITY IN EGGS QUITE ESSENTIAL

Eggs are still more or less plentiful at this season, and a little later on they will not be quite so plentiful. The result will be that there will appear the temptation to hold eggs before selling so that the price will go up some. Here is where the danger lies in that practice: on most farms, that is, general farms, and fruit farms too, where poultry is not given all the attention it should have, the males are permitted to run with the flock in summer as in the spring, when breeding is done. The eggs thus obtained are, therefore, fertile. With the hot weather of summer, these eggs are very likely to start developing if they are held very long before selling. Eggs should be disposed of twice a week at least, preferably three times a week.

This, then, is one factor that affects quality in table eggs. Another is the fact that quite often hens will steal their nests and lay a number of eggs before the nest is discovered. Many of these eggs will be unfit for use, but sometimes they are included in the lot that is to be sold. This should be watched carefully and avoided. It is a good plan to have a home-made egg candler handy and test all eggs before they are sold. Such a candler is not difficult to make; a piece of stovepipe with a hole in it about the size of an egg will do very well. Set the pipe over the lamp so the hole comes opposite the flame, and by holding an egg up to this hole, a great deal can be determined about the inside of the egg. A normal egg that is fit for consumption will appear clear except for the orange colored yolk, and the air cell will be very, very small if it is a strictly fresh egg, that is, a trifle less than the size of a 10-cent piece in diameter. An egg that is dark or black shows that some embryo growth has taken place, and it is therefore unfit for food.

It is difficult under some circumstances to maintain quality in eggs during the summer months, but it can be done. Hold eggs at a temperature of not higher than 65 degrees, if possible; make sure that all eggs are gathered every night; sell eggs often—twice or three times a week; remove the males from the flock to produce infertile eggs; don't let the eggs set in the sun on the way to market.

Gapes Is Troublesome Disease of Chickens

Gapes is a disease of young chickens caused by a small reddish worm which attaches itself to the inner lining of the windpipe. It is often called a forked worm, for the reason that the male and female worm are often found attached to one another at an angle which gives the appearance of a single worm. The presence of the worms may be demonstrated by passing a loop of horsehair or small wire down the windpipe for a short distance and turning it to loosen the worms.

By stripping a feather of all its web except a small tuft at the end and dipping this in kerosene and inserting it into the windpipe where the worms are attached will often cause the worms to loosen their hold. However, the main remedy must lie in prevention. Badly infected stock should be killed and burned and all rubbish, runs and houses cleaned up and thoroughly disinfected. The ground should be spaded up or plowed and thoroughly limed. Rotation of runs for the chickens will do a great deal to stop the trouble.

Save Market Eggs

A detail of the poultry business which means a good deal in the final figuring of profits is the packing of eggs which are sent to market. This may seem like a small thing at first thought, but the loss of even a few eggs in each case may amount to a total of respectable size at the end of the year. Eggs should be packed in a manner which will assure the minimum of loss. Observance of a few simple rules will cut losses very largely, and it is just as easy to pack the eggs right as wrong.

Trained Eye Is Asset

A trained eye is one of the most valuable assets that the poultry man can develop. Through it he may forestall serious epidemics; through it he may turn loss into profit. The trained eye will tell him when the chicks are not making proper growth which experience or reliable advice will teach him to correct. Again, the trained eye will detect the slightest variation in the reaction of the fowls to a change in their surroundings. It will be a constant guide.

Ducks for Market

Ducks are one form of poultry that can be adjusted to commercial or factory-like methods. On the larger plants one will find the incubator rather close to the dwelling. The ducklings are moved from here to the first house when heat is supplied and then by regular stages to other buildings that differ in construction according to their needs until they end up at the killing room. This, in most instances, is a plant where they are turned as green ducks.

For the Hen's Grinder

Gravel or very coarse sand is an absolute necessity if hens are to remain in good condition for laying. Without gravel the food that enters the gizzard is not properly digested. Gravel or sand does not contain enough lime to furnish shells to the eggs or that is needed to keep the bones in condition and the easiest way to supply this is to keep crushed oyster shell or clamshell before the hens at all times. Keep it where the hens can get at it at all times.

FIRST to have a proving ground

Three years ago General Motors purchased an 1125-acre tract, 40 miles from Detroit and accessible to all its car and truck divisions.

This was transformed into a great Proving Ground, with every kind of road and grade over which an automobile is called upon to travel.

Here the collective experience and brains of the whole General Motors family are brought to bear upon the problems of each member; and here each make of General Motors car must prove itself against the best that American or European genius has developed.

The Proving Ground marks a forward step in the guarantee of motor car satisfaction. It is your final assurance that you are investing when you buy a General Motors car.

HOW ENDLESS CHAIN SELLING PLANS ARE USED TO ROB SAVERS

W. R. Morehouse Continues His Exposures of Modern "Gold Brick" Schemes—American Bankers Association Official Tells How Life-Time Savings Are Wiped Out.

By W. R. MOREHOUSE,
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association.

ARTICLE NO. II

I FIRMLY believe that promoters and high-pressure salesmen are becoming more and more crafty. Shrewder ways are being resorted to in order to trap the novice investor. It is deplorable that the investor does not profit by experience and is victimized a second time in his endeavor to recover that which he has already lost. It is the old, old story of trying to recover, but in the attempt losing. This very hour thousands of hard-earned dollars have slipped from the grasp of the calloused hands that earned them into the clutches of unscrupulous skin-game artists. Tomorrow the scenes of today will be re-enacted with a new and larger list of victims. A month from today depositors will still be pouring an ever increasing volume of their savings into the hopper of unwise investments. A year from today the same tragedy will be re-enacted unless our savings bankers come to the rescue and help to stop this nefarious business of defrauding and swindling our savers of the fruits of their labors.

W. R. Morehouse

Here is a typical case. A group of men undertook to promote a vending or self-serving machine. Their plan called for the sale of $37,000,000 worth of leases in the United States. Similar projects previously started throughout the United States had failed. As a matter of fact, the average daily sale of one of these self-service machines was only $3.10, which in itself made it impossible for a machine to produce sufficient revenue to make it profitable. Servicing the machines was another obstacle which had not been successfully overcome. In three months the promoters were successful in selling over $2,500,000 worth of rights to use these machines.

$40,000 In Savings Lost by One Man

I know of one man who withdrew $40,000 from a savings bank and invested it in this promotion. He told me it represented the accumulations of a lifetime. "And now I have lost it all," he said in a trembling voice. "I haven't a cent left and I am past sixty years of age—too old to work!" he added.

Of the more than $2,500,000 invested by savers, over $1,000,000 was taken by these wiley promoters as commission. Think of making a commission of over $1,000,000 on $2,500,000 of sales in about three months' time! Think of what this more than $1,000,000 of commission represents,—think of the struggles and the sacrifices of the men and women who saved it! With some it was saved penny by penny over a period of years. Think of the sorrow it caused,—the heartaches, the misery and the disappointment which followed in the wake of the collapse of this promotion. Think of the old man who lost $40,000—all he had been able to save during his lifetime. Think of the widow's mite, for she lost it also. All that is left today of the original investment is less than 10 cents on every dollar.

Here is an endless chain scheme which relieved working girls of a portion of their savings. The loss ran into many thousands of dollars. The scheme is to sell silk hose to girls by getting them to act as selling agents. A hosiery company rents offices in the shopping district. Soon an attractive offer is made through the local newspapers by cleverly worded advertisements in which it would appear that any young lady can secure five pairs of hose worth $2 a pair for only $1. In other words, $10 worth of silk stockings for only $1! Without stopping to analyze the proposition or to consider how impossible it is for any concern to stay in business and sell $10 worth of silk hose for $1, thousands of young women instantly fall for the scheme.

How Endless Chain Catches Victims

Here is how it catches its victims. Each victim pays $4 and receives three one dollar coupons which she must sell to her friends, and the friends must come in and pay down $4 each, get three coupons each which they must sell to three friends and then these friends must perpetuate the scheme by selling coupons to their friends and so on indefinitely.

Here is where the promoters make a clean-up. One of the conditions which must be met before the young woman who purchased the first coupons receives her $10 worth of hose for $1 is that all three to whom she sold her three coupons must come in, pay down $4 each for three more coupons and then go out and sell them. Before the three have done this, one or perhaps all three get "cold feet" on the proposition and, rather than go out and "soak" three of their friends $1 each, they simply give up the job and charge their loss to experience. But in doing so they also block the girl who purchased the first coupons from completing her contract, and of course she, too, loses the money she invested in the scheme.

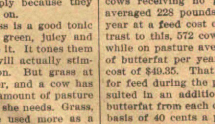
At a glance the loss appears to be small, but the truth is the scheme is capable of such great expansion that it soon takes in hundreds and thousands of victims. This is but one of many endless chain schemes in use today in the United States.

(Article III will deal with land swindles and loan shark plans for robbing people of their savings.)

Milk Can't Be Made On Tonic

Grass is a good tonic for the cow but she can't make milk on tonic, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. If she is expected to continue to do a day's work every day, she will have to get enough to eat of a good nourishing feed.

"Few dairymen realize that in some respects a dairy cow is a great deal like a human being," states the Institute. "No human being would stop eating meat and potatoes simply because he was eating lettuce and spinach to tone up his system, yet many dairymen believe that their cows do not need grain simply because they have grass to graze on.



"Fresh spring grass is a good tonic for the cow. It is green, juicy and palatable. Cows like it. It tones them up and for a time will actually stimulate milk production. But grass at its best is half water, and a cow has to eat an enormous amount of pasture daily to get the feed she needs. Grass, therefore, should be used more as a tonic than as a feed. All dairymen should use pasture but they should use it intelligently and should use it with grain. The practice of turning out herds on pasture as soon as the grass comes up thick and green is always a costly move, both in damage to pasture, and, to an even greater extent, in the falling off in production on the part of cows relying on grass alone for their nourishment."

Actual tests by E. A. Hanson, in charge of cow test association work in Minnesota, of the effects of pasture feeding as compared to the use of grain, especially throughout the spring and early summer, showed that 1,231 cows receiving no grain on pasture averaged 228 pounds of butterfat per year at a feed cost of $41.87. In contrast to this, 572 cows receiving grain while on pasture averaged 296 pounds of butterfat per year, at a total feed cost of $49.35. That extra $7.48 spent for feed during the pasture season resulted in an additional 68 pounds of butterfat from each cow, which, on the basis of 40 cents a pound, was worth $27.20, or a net profit of $19.72 above the added cost of feed.

A mass meeting at Baltimore under the auspices of the Presbyterian General Assembly was featured by a fighting address by Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, which newspaper observers immediately characterized as placing him in the forefront of pessibilities for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1928. That Senator Borah, as a crusading prohihitionist, would be a formidable contender was the view of keen politicians.

Senator Borah not only bitterly attacked the liquor traffic as a curse to the human family, but assailed the wets who are campaigning for so-called liquor referendums in various States.

"The supreme test of a free government," he said, "is the right of the people to write and unwrite its Constitution and its laws. The supreme test of good citizenship is to obey the Constitution and the laws when written. To disregard our Constitution, to evade it, to nullify it, while still refusing to change it, is to plant the seeds of destruction in the heart of the nation—is to confess before the world that we have neither the moral courage nor the intellectual sturdiness for self-government.

"If the people want to take the Eighteenth Amendment out of the Constitution in the only constitutional way it can be taken out, if they want to turn this problem back to the States, and believe that to be the wiser course, that is their unquestioned right. But so long as it stands, speaking for myself, I would kick into the waste basket any referendum which would compromise either in letter or in spirit with its execution.

"If this scheme could be put in to effect, forty-eight States would construe the Federal Constitution and the Federal authorities would have to accept the forty-eight constructions. We might have forty-eight different standards of intoxicating liquor and forty-eight different methods of determing intoxicating liquor. Each State would have the right to ship its brand of liquor into every other State.

"The Federal Government would be placed in the position of conniving at this condition and compelled to sit silent and supine while confusion reigned supreme over the prostrate and discredited form of the Federal Constitution. Although the Federal Government is the defender and the interpreter of the Federal Constitution, it is by this program to be called upon to abdicate, to surrender and leave all to the States. This is constitutional anarchy.

"If this referendum interrogatory has any meaning at all, it is that every State shall determine for itself its own construction of, and obligation to the Constitution of the United States, and that construction is to bind the Federal Government.

"That doctrine was shot to death at the Battle of the Wilderness. A reunited and disenthralled and happy nation has put it behind us for all time. Now what these advocates of the referendum want, when they speak candidly and plainly, is the right to sell and transport intoxicating liquor. What they want is to transfer the control of this question to the States, and these things they want to do by nullifying the Constitution instead of amending it.

"The vote of the people upon the issue should not exempt candidates and leaders from declaring their positions upon this question A candidate who has no conviction upon this question and no position to announce before the election will likely betray both sides after the election. The people are entitled to have the views and the judgment of those to whom they are asked to entrust great public responsibility. This, and all other great problems of State, demand men with convictions before as well as after the election."

Specific recommendations for dealing with the prohibition situation were submitted to the Assembly, as follows:

"Make punishment swift, sure and adequate.

"Pour out anew a flood of fact and truth in our schools, churches places of business and society in general.

"Make the purchaser, user and apologist as guilty and disreputable as the maker, the peddler, the seller and the political protector.

"Hold the officer whose duty it is to enforce the law as guilty, when he fails to do so, as the man who violates the law.

"Be as prompt and sure to praise and support one who does his duty as to condemn one who fails to do so."

While the churches and the club women by the millions have thus reiterated their unswerving loyalty to the cause of prohibition, they must now see to it that that loyalty finds effective expression. The wets are centering their fight in seven States where wet sentiment is strongest—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Massachusetts, Illinois and Missouri. They do not have any hope that this fall they can elect a wet Congress—at least, the well informed ones do not cherish such hope but they do hope to make a showing of strength which will shake the confidence of the country at large and put them in a position to conduct the fight on a much wider scale in the 1928 campaign. They tacitly concede that forty one States are in favor of prohibition, and leave them alone to select battle-grounds where they feel they have the drys at a disadvantage.

In Pennsylvania, where the dry strength was divided between Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot in the Republican Senator race they succeeded in nominating an avowed wet, Representative William S. Vare, but Vare's vote fell 200,000 short of the total piled up by his opponents, and a dry won the Republican nomination for Governor. Their claims of victory therefore, are subject to severe qualification. And there is a strong sentiment of revolt against the Vare nomination. Already the Anti Saloon League and the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, to name only two organizations, have announced their endorsement of William B. Wilson, former Secretary of Labor, the Democratic nominee for Senator, and are urging the voters to disregard partisan lines in the interests of the public welfare.

It is in New York State that the wets are most confident, for the so-called referendum on prohibition is cunningly devised in their behalf. They are beginning early to figure how big a majority they can pile up. In other states which the wet count as distinctly their own, projects for similar referendum is their great desire, "modification" leaders were glad that Congress would not authorize such a project, for they realized it would show them to be in the minority.

In several states this year, good citizenship has a chance to make its influence decisively manifest on the prohibition issue. Defeats for the wets this year on the battlefields of their own selection will crush their noisy agitation and keep prohibition from being the big issue in the 1928 campaign. If good citizenship stands aloof this year, a harder battle must needs be waged later.

The ultimate triumph of prohibition is certain, but the sooner the decision comes the better it will be for the United States and for the world.—The Christian Herald.

FROM PALETTE TO MORTAR BOARD

Young women artists turn from their jars of color and paint brushes to assist plasterers in setting ornaments in place atop huge pylons which adorn the main entrances to the Palace of Agriculture and Food Products, of the vast exhibition buildings which forms a part of the great Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition being staged in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Climbing ladders and walking along rickety scaffolds is nothing new to these young ladies, but each time they do it they get a thrill.

Amir Bux, a genuine East Indian conjurer, produces a Liberty Bell from a reporter's hat. He is one of the artists in the India Building at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, which opened in Philadelphia June 1 to December 1 to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Bishop Pinten was born in Rockland, Ontonagon County, Michigan, Oct. 3, 1867, and moved with his family to Calumet the following year. In 1881 he entered St. Francis' Seminary in Wisconsin and in 1885 was sent to Rome to pursue his theological studies. He was ordained in Rome Nov. 1, 1890. The following year he returned to Michigan and was assigned to a parish at Detour, in Chippewa County. Later he served in the parishes of Iron Mountain and L'Anse.

Subsequently he was appointed pastor of St. Peter's Cathedral at Marquette and then became chancellor of the Marquette Diocese. In 1912 he was made vicar-general of the diocese and in the same year was made a member of the Pope's household by Pope Pius X. He was appointed Bishop of Superior by the late Pope Benedict XV and was consecrated in Marquette May 3, 1922.

CROWNER OF HUNGARIAN KINGS DETROIT'S GUEST

Cardinal Sszernoch Occupies Post in Native Land Established in Tenth Century

John Cardinal Csernoch, Metropolitan Prince Primate of the Roman Catholic church in Hungary, and Prince Archbishop of Strigonia, the man who, previous to the World War had as part of his duties the crowning of the kings of Hungary, was a Michigan visitor recently. As the guest of the Holy Cross, Hungarian, parish in Detroit, he confirmed a class of 400 children and adults and was tendered a reception in which more than 10,000 Hungarian-Americans took part.

As Primate of Hungary, Cardinal Csernoch occupies a position created in the tenth century by St. Stephen, first Christian king of that country. Among those who greeted him in Detroit was His Excellency, Count Ladislaus Szechenyi, Hungarian ambassador to the United States, who was ordered to Michigan for the reception by his government.

While in Detroit Cardinal Csernoch lived at the home of the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit.

New Jersey Farmers Like Local Wheat

Michigan grown Red Rock wheat seed will be planted rather extensively in eastern states this year, if inquires coming into the state college here are a good indication.

New Jersey farmers are pooling orders for Michigan Red Rock, which is certified by the state crop improvement association, according to word received here by H. C. Rather, specialist in farm crops at M. S. C. Tests made at the New Jersey Agricultural College have shown Red Rock to be an unusually good yielder in the eastern state. The results is a demand for certified seed of this strain.

Red Rock wheat was developed at the Michigan experiment station by the late Prof. Frank A. Spragg, plant breeder at the college. It has become recognized as a leading variety not only for Michigan but also for many other sections of the country.

Trees Must be Coddled

A plea to save the lives of trees by sufficient watering during the warm weather season was recently made by Congressman Martin L. Davey of Ohio. He says;

"It is just as important and as humane a deed to water our good friends, the trees, in summer, as it is to feed the birds in winter.

Trees are living things and even more helpless than birds. Lacking the power of locomotion, they cannot go where water is. They must depend entirely upon human beings for their supply. The average householder keeps his lawn well watered because it soon shows the neglect of this duty. He pays less attention to his trees because the results of neglect are slow in appearing. A parched lawn may be renewed within a growing season but a stately tree not within a generation.

Sprinkling the lawn for a brief period in the evening does not help the trees, in fact it may do harm by attracting the roots too close to the surface of the ground. An effective way is to perforate the soil beneath the spread of the tree with a spading fork to the depth of 8 inches. Water should be run into these holes for several hours at least every two weeks, depending upon the amount of rainfall. If you think water is not essential to a tree you are mistaken, since an average tree with a 50 feet spread of foliage under normal conditions, will throw off 5 barrels of water per day in the form of vapor which rises to the clouds and eventually falls as rain on the earth.

When you think of the vast number of trees engaged in this utility, you will readily understand the importance of woodlands in effecting the moisture and rainfall of the country. This is demonstrated in vivid colors by the streams and inland cities which always suffer a drought before the summer is over simply because the timber has all been cut off near the headwaters of these streams. This wonderful process of distilling water from the ground goes on until the tree becomes dormant and freezes in the winter months. It is especially noticeable in the sugar maple as soon as the first warm sun in March strikes the sheltered ravines in the woods the sap starts upward with a rush even though snow banks lie deep under the fences. The farmer taps his trees and this sweet stream gushes into his buckets.

It passes upward to the leaves and condenses in the air through openings so small that a dime will cover 10,000 of them.

Delegates from 24 different states met at the M. S. C. from July 6-9 for the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Association College Editors. Ways and means of improving the information service furnished by the colleges over the country in connection with agricultural extension work occupied the delegates at the conference. These "college" editors handle news service from their institutions, edit agricultural bulletins, and carry responsibility for radio and other information mediums. The same group will meet in Colorado for their annual meeting in 1927.

They've Done it At Last

We note by the last issue of the National Tribune published at Washington D. C. in the interest of the Civil War veterans and their widows, that at last the much mooted pension bill has been passed by Congress and approved by President Coolidge and what a bill it is!

After more than two years of bickering among the Congressmen and nation-wide notoriety, the famous little joke has become a law. The few remaining vets aged and feeble and the widows of those gone before have anguished and watched and waited, for this great and bombastic government to do something for them and it has finally handed a bunch of lemons to these poor old Plebeians.

President Coolidge, we believe one of the wisest and most reserved men whom the Nation has seen fit to place in supreme authority, has done his level best to cut down the tax of the common people, he has sweltered in the whit-hot flame of criticism, he has sweat blood as it were to bring the country out of its chaotic condition, but we fear he has begun at the wrong end of the barrel to conserve its contents; it looks a mighty effort at the bung but a weak drip at the spigot as far as real economy is concerned. The average reader has little idea of the rapidity with which these old veterans and their faithful widows are fading. Every calendar day of the year this government is relieved of a burden of millions in pensions by their deaths, and it hesitates and hedges at allowing for the brief time only, a few of them will be here, an income adequate for their living expenses, yet up there at Washington if a Senator who receives $20,000 per year takes a notion to provide a $5,000 dinner for a bunch of his titled aristocratic associates, it is considered quite up to date and moreover very popular. Who pays these silk hat Senators for quarreling and jockeying on the floor of Congress? Who pays for the high powered automobiles which the Senators and the President drive to and from the Capitol? Why is it a mediocre stunt for a Senatorial candidate to broadcast $10,000 over his district in an effort to control the primaries? Lastly why do we continue the asinine practice of appointing Senators whose close connection with corporations renders their services practically worthless to the common people?

These and a hundred other questions we would like to ask, but space forbids. Suffice it to say, however, that after two years of quiddling Congress has consented to a measure that may benefit the old vets slightly and one widow in a thousand, possibly, while during these two years ten thousand have ceased from trouble and gone to their reward. By means of their jockying tactics in the halls of Congress, it might be possible for our silk hatted Senators to block this law until the last survivor of the conflict of '64 will have entered the shadowy hereafter.

Men Who Die At Their Posts

The submarine which was finally salvaged from the bed of the Atlantic off Long Island has been towed into dry dock at Brooklyn and evidences of the catastrophe are being investigated. The men who manned the sub are mostly found at their posts, and it is ghastly to relate the circumstances as divers found the radio operator at his board and the others wherever they happened to be stationed showing conclusively there were no cowards in that crew. While they must have all known at once their fate yet never a man moved. Discipline was stronger than self preservation.

However there is talk of re-rigging the S-51 and putting her again in service but we imagine it is easier said than done. We doubt if a crew can be found who would care to submerge again in the unlucky craft as superstition is yet common to sailor men. The ghosts of the crew of S-51 will rise to condemn the government which drives its brave sea fighters to manning such ungainly hulks.

The League of Nations should outlawsubmarine fighting; it is a relic ofthe dark ages. Since the days when Simon Lake built the first little submarine boat the pages of naval history have been literally daubed with disasters owing to the unseaworthiness of these craft.

The great and powerful United States Government should follow its own humane motives and set the example for the world by discouraging submarine warfare. But will it? Not in your day, not in any day if the fire-eating militarists have their way. Their gospel is to kill as many of the innocent as possible of each generation lest the country become over-populated.

Hardening Of The Arteries

"Hardening of the arteries," or arteriosclerosis, is a chronic disease of the blood vessels and, as its name implies, means that the walls of the vessels, which are normally elastic, have become thicker and harder and no longer respond to the force exerted by the stream of blood. The vessel wall offer abnormal resistance to the blood current, or they give way before it and rupture. Opposition and rupture give rise to characteristic symptoms and results.

This thickening of blood vessel walls is most commonly found in those past sixty years of age as a part of the natural process of ageing, or as a result of infection, etc. In younger men and women in whom this condition occurs prematurely, the cause is not always easy to find. Inheritance and the type of life which has been led have something to do with the development of it. Those who shoulder responsibilities which are excessive, or live a life of constant excitement and strain, are predisposed to it.

In indirect, but powerful ways, kidney trouble, diabetes and other diseases may cause arteriosclerosis Alcoholism and the use of tobacco are commonly supposed to have much to do with it, but there is no conclusive proof that this is true. The famous Dr. Osler has said that over-eating was the only cause in some cases and many doctors agree with him. Infectious diseases and sedentary habits are of some influence in the causation of arterial hardening.

Syphilis has an exceedingly black name, for it is held responsible for a large proportion of a certain type of arteriosclerosis.

The symptons which the patient experiences depend upon whether or not the hardening has occurred in some localized piace or is wide spread and, of course, the mildness or severity of the suffering is proportionate to the sensitivity of the attacked point or the degree of trouble. In many cases no suffering is caused, while in other early types there may be those nervous manifestations, fatigue, etc., which occasionally masquerade under the term, neurasthenie.

In severe cases, the danger lies in the possibility of heart failure, apoplexy (in which a blood vessel "gives way" with damage to brain tissue) and other more or less serious abnormalities.

The method for avoiding it is summed up in the simple rule: "Be moderate in all things. "Live sensibly and hygienically, and granted that you have a good inheritance and escape the diseases which influence its appearance, the chances are that you will not get arteriosclerosis until you are too old to care much about it.

Why Allow Fire Traps Built

An examination of fire records shows that open stairs and shafts —easily remedied conditions—are responsible for practically all serious blazes that destroy life and property. Most blazes start in the basement and as their natural tendency is to sweep upward, they follow the nearest pathway available. This is usually some nearby elevator well or stairway, and all too often fires flare up through a structure so rapidly there is little or no time for its occupants to escape with their lives. When air is heated to 1,000 fahrenheit, or more, it will set fire to everything combustible which it touches. Actual flame may extend only a few feet from the spot where it originates, but the hot smoke and invisible heat waves will pass along an incombustable passage for perhaps 50 or 100 feet and in an instant ignite the whole surface of a wood door or partition, The only way to avoid destruction is to enclose the elevator shafts with masonry and have closely fitting metal doors at each landing, so as to prevent escape of smoke and heat to the upper floors. Insurance companies have suffered terribly from such fires for the past five years, and it is claimed the rates on ramshackle buildings will have to be raised.

Galli-Curci Swayed by the Seer of Sweden

Emanuel Swedenborg, Scientist and Theologian — Amelita Galli-Curci — Clarence W. Barron, Financial Authority

Prima Donna Gives Wonderful Interpretation of the Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg—

HENRY FORD'S Dearborn Independent publishes a remarkable article on Galli-Curci and Emanuel Swedenborg, by Clarence W. Barron of the Wall Street Journal, the world famous financial authority.

Mr. Barron declares that Galli-Curci has the most wonderful brain he has ever met or heard of in a woman, although she is much more "a true woman with a life and soul of affection for all that is ennobling and uplifting in the family, and in color, form, and music."

Mr. Barron is chairman of the Rotch Trustees, who acting under the will of Lydia S. Rotch of New Bedford, Mass., began in 1872 a modern translation of the Theological Works which Emanuel Swedenborg wrote and published in the Latin tongue, and deposited in the libraries of the world 150 years ago.

This work was completed and published by the Houghton Mifflin Co. in 32 volumes in 1907.

About three years ago there appeared in a Cleveland paper a paragraph that among her other accomplishments Galli-Curci had read all the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg. The claim seemed so absurd to Mr. Barron that he thought it might be easily punctured by a simple inquiry as to the edition.

The Bible a Greater Work Than Ever

To Mr. Barron's direct inquiry Madame Galli-Curci promptly replied: "Yes, I have read in the past year the complete Swedenborg Works, in fact it is the Rotch Edition of the Houghton Mifflin Co. that I have.

"I can say certainly that the Bible to me is a greater work than it was before."

Mr. Barron says: "My astonishment was intensified. Familiar over many years with Swedenborg's general theological writings, I had set out to read the entire thirty-two volumes preparatory to an advertising campaign for the sale of this edition. Reading a few pages each day I finished my self-imposed task in fourteen years. I shall probably finish a second reading, at my present rate of progress, in perhaps ten years. Was it possible that a woman with no previous knowledge or relation to these books had really intelligently read them within a year?"

Swedenborg's Writings

Mr. Barron continues: "As an economist writing state papers on weights, measures, coinages and currencies, Swedenborg is easily comprehended. As an engineer transporting ships overland he is easily visualized. As a government official in the great mining industry of Sweden, writing practical books on mining and smelting, declared to be the foundation of modern metallurgy, he is of interest in the encyclopedia of scientific history. As the writer of volumes—original studies in search for the human soul—he is not without human interest.

"But when one comes to the realm of the unseen, where there is neither time nor space upon which to rest mental conceptions, few may enter into the fullness of the revelation which has come into the libraries of the world through Emanuel Swedenborg.

"Think of twenty modern-sized volumes, originally written in the Latin tongue and unfolding from the Hebrew of 'Genesis' and 'Exodus' the internal or spiritual sense that lies beneath the letter. Annex a dozen more similar volumes that not only expound every picture set forth in the book of 'Revelation' as conveyor of a tremendous truth of universal application throughout invisible degrees of creation and life, but also illumine all the problems of sex as presented throughout the universe from the union of the love and wisdom in the divine down to sex crystallization in the mineral kingdom; include the deepest of all works ever written entitled, in the original Latin, 'Angelic Wisdom Concerning the Divine Love and the Divine Wisdom.' Then answer to yourself the number of years that ought to be required to master these thirty-two volumes."

Mean More Than Any Other Books

Mr. Barron, still credulous, continued his correspondence with Madame Galli-Curci for some months. He learned that soon after she lost her dear mother she had sought the Writings of Swedenborg in a desire to know more about the other world whence her mother had gone. She spent the entire summer vacation studying Swedenborg's Works, and declared: "They have meant, and mean more to me than anything else I have ever read."

When Galli-Curci returned from California Mr. Barron motored up into the Catskills to her beautiful Italian palace, and in an afternoon with her and her husband, Mr. Homer Samuels, he was convinced that Galli-Curci had read and devoured Swedenborg in a briefer period than anybody had ever done before.

He says of this interview:

"Hours flew like minutes. I wasn't the questioner. Mr. and Mrs. Samuels were at me with the sharpest and deepest questions. They seemed in perfect harmony mentally and spiritually, as in their work in music.

Wanted to Learn

"She wanted to know about the 'Grand Man'. I told her it would be easier to comprehend it if she would forego the idea of time and space and consider, as Swedenborg says in 'The Apocalypse Explained', that every society in the heavens connects with some organ of the human body and helps to sustain it. Therefore the heavens have the organization of the 'Grand Man', but we need not think of it as a shape or figure.

"'Yes,' exclaimed her husband, 'I see it; it is organization.' I explained, also, how the 'Psalms' likewise connected with every society of the heavens, and how the world within and without was knit together in one grand poem and song of creation, man in the image of his Maker and knit into Him through the heavens, from which he has life in every organ of his body.

Swedenborg's 32 Volumes Read in a Single Summer

"'Now I understand,' she said, and asked me for explanation of other things. Her intelligent questions, as well as her statements, left no manner of doubt that Galli-Curci had performed the stupendous feat of reading the thirty-two volumes of Swedenborg in a single summer season. She declared 'Heaven and Hell' a very attractive and popular title and concerns that about which people are most eager to know; but it is not one of Swedenborg's great works; although it makes a good popular and introductory work."

A Help in Her Work

Galli-Curci understands the writings of Swedenborg even better than theologians, because she puts them into practice in the broadest life of loving helpfulness.

She said that Swedenborg had helped her in her work. She had no longer to think of herself but of her audiences, and let the music flow through her: regard herself just a medium for life to pour through. She felt with and for her audiences, and singing was no effort for her.

All Fear Vanishes

"The more you do—the more you give forth—the more life and energy is poured into you, and you are stronger and not weaker for the doing, the working and the singing. I always feel stronger; I am not exhausted at all by my singing. Swedenborg shows the reason and how life comes in as you pour it forth usefully to others. You don't have to try or worry or fret. You know it is not you but that it is just being done through you."

Speaking further of the help Swedenborg had been to her in her work she said: "One gets so much more confidence. The other world and the one life, that comprehends all life, becomes reality and all fear and worry vanish."

President Begins Vacation, Fairly Pleased With the Record of Congress.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SENATORS and representatives have scattered to their homes or to summer resorts, following the adjournment of congress; and President and Mrs. Coolidge with their entourage have gone to the secluded camp on Lake Osgood in the Adirondacks which is the summer White House. The Chief Executive jumped into his vacation with unwonted eagerness and celebrated its first day by catching a three-pound pike for dinner. His camp is quite isolated but it is expected that he will entertain a good many visitors who will be put up in the several cabins attached to the house.

Before starting for the north Mr. Coolidge ran down to Philadelphia and delivered a Fourth of July address to 30,000 people at the Sesquicentennial exposition. His speech, which dwelt mainly on the unimprovable excellence of the foundation principles of the American government, was perhaps rather platitudinous but studious and well phrased.

WASHINGTON correspondents reported that the President was fairly well satisfied with the record of the first session of the Sixty-ninth congress. Its main achievements were the reduction of taxes, the funding of war debts and the approval of the world court resolution. All these measures were urged by the administration, and they also were supported by most of the Democrats in congress. In the matter of farm relief legislation the President did lose out, but he is not dismayed by this nor greatly disturbed by the rumbles of party revolt in the corn belt. He believes his opposition to bills for price fixing will be vindicated in time, and he doubts that the Republican farmers will join with the Democrats in attacking the tariff. All in all, the President believes the Republican party has nothing to be ashamed of and should not be considered as being on the defensive; and while he continues to hold aloof from all primary contests, he will, as head of his party, do his utmost to help it win victory in the November elections.

SENATOR CAMERON of Arizona successfully killed by filibustering the resolution to limit primary campaign expenditures of candidates for senator to $25,000. The Reed committee made public the names of contributors to the Anti-Saloon league and the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, which were given it in the course of the inquiry into the Pennsylvania primary. The John D. Rockefellers, father and son, were the most liberal givers to the dry cause during the last eighteen months, having contributed $60,500. Chairman Stayton of the wet organization said it had collected approximately $800,000, less than half of which had been contributed directly to the national association by sympathizers or allocated to it by state subsidiaries. The largest contribution—$5,200—was from a Mrs. Van Gerbig of Connecticut.

The investigation into the Pennsylvania primary was practically completed and the committee separated to meet again in Chicago on July 26 for the purpose of inquiring into the expenditures during the Smith-McKinley senatorial primary contest. Senator Reed hopes to unmask at that time some of the influences behind the world court resolution, which is as obnoxious to him as prohibition.

OPPOSITION to ratification of the Berenger settlement of the French debt has grown tremendously in France and during a stormy session of the chamber of deputies Premier Briand said the cabinet intended to wait and submit the entire foreign debt program after the British problem was settled and when certain ameliorations in the American accord were definitely established. Franklin-Bouillon attacked the Berenger agreement bitterly and was tumultuously applauded by almost the entire chamber.

Finance Minister Caillaux had demanded that he be given dictatorial powers to carry out his plans for stabilization of the franc, but this, too, was violently opposed, especially by the Socialists, and it seemed likely the chamber would not consent. The franc fell to a new low level—39.80 to the dollar.

Former combatants and mutilated veterans of the war in Paris planned to demonstrate against the Washington accord by hanging crepe on the doorway of the American embassy. Ambassador Herrick protested against such an insult and the government forbade the demonstration, but the angry veterans declared they would carry out their plan notwithstanding, but with some modifications.

PRESIDENT CALLES' war on the Catholics in Mexico reached a new stage last week when decrees were issued forbidding religious publications to comment on political or national affairs and prohibiting monasteries, nunneries and religious orders. Heavy penalties are provided for violations. The government frankly admits the purpose of the restrictive decrees is to keep the Catholic church out of Mexican politics. Cardinal Gasparri, in the name of the pope, sent letters to representatives of the holy see all over the world, appointing August 1, the feast of "St. Peter in chains," as a day for special prayers "for the deliverance of Mexican Catholics from persecution and for pardon for their persecutors."

CONFUSION rules in Poland, due to the indecision of Marshal Pilsudski in regard to a national policy, and the situation is threatening not alone to Poland but to the peace of Europe. The bolshevists are extremely active, stirring up clashes between the soldiery and the civilians, while soviet Russia waits grimly on the eastern borders. The Polish military extremists are clamoring for the cession of more land from Germany, and the Germans retaliate with demands for the return of territory taken from them and given to Poland. The relations between the two nations are painfully strained. In the diet the dictator's government is being boldly denounced, but the constitutional changes he demands are likely to be made unless he is first ousted by another revolution. These changes would give the president blanket power to rule by decree until 1928.

NATURE continued her rampage in many parts of the world last week. The earthquakes in southern Europe and Asia were followed by temblors in Sumatra and Java that took many lives. Floods in Mexico, Austria and Japan were growing worse. After record-breaking snowstorms in the mountains of South America, a terrific cyclonic storm swept over Chile, resulting in destructive floods and landslides. Torrential rains and high winds prevailed in Ohio, damaging the crops.

AFTER many months of persistent work, the hull of the submarine S-51 was raised from the sea bottom off Block island and towed to the Brooklyn navy yard where the rusted hulk is to be cut open with acetylene torches so that the twenty-four bodies it contains may be removed and given honored burial. Credit for raising the submarine is given Lieut. Commander Edward Ellsburg who had charge of the engineering details. The S-51, it will be remembered, was sunk last September in collision with a steamer and thirty-three men perished.

SALEM, the Massachusetts town famous for its "witches" and for its one-time prominence as a shipping port, is three hundred years old, and has been celebrating the anniversary with picturesque doings. On the main day of the celebration Vice President Charles G. Dawes reviewed a big parade, attended a banquet and delivered a message of greeting from President Coolidge, besides making a lively speech on his own behalf.

Speaking of General Dawes, he has let it be known that he intends to spend much of his summer vacation on the stump in a coast to coast campaign for the reform of the senate rules.

TWO big American cities have been partly tied up by street transportation strikes. In New York the motormen and switchmen of the subway division, Interborough Rapid Transit company, quit work and in a few days were joined by the men on the elevated lines. They demanded higher wages. Hundreds of strikebreakers were employed by the company and partial service was maintained, but New Yorkers found it difficult to get to their work and home again.

Street railroad employees of Indianapolis also struck for more pay and for recognition of their national union. The public there was not seriously inconvenienced. The police, remembering the strike riots of 1913, were armed with sawed-off shotguns and arrested a number of strikers who attacked street cars.

THE new board of mediation created by the Watson-Parker railway labor act has been appointed by President Coolidge and has organized for work. The members are Samuel E. Winslow of Massachusetts, manufacturer and former chairman of the house interstate commerce committee; Edwin P. Morrow and G. W. W. Hanger, who were on the old railroad labor board; Carl Williams, editor of the Oklahoma Farmer Stockman, and Hywel Davies, mediator for the Department of Labor. The first thing before the board is the wage demand of the four big railroad brotherhoods, the members of which ask increases averaging one dollar a day each. The railroads in the eastern district rejected the demands, saying they could not raise wages when they had not yet earned the return of 5¾ per cent prescribed by the Interstate Commerce commission under the transportation act. Both sides agreed to submit the dispute to the board of mediation. Railroads of the South and West are expected to reach an agreement with the brotherhoods to let the board decide the matter.

EVERYONE in the remotest degree interested in automobiles will be interested in the figures just announced by the Department of Commerce, showing that one person in every seventy-one in the world owns a car. On the basis of a world population in 1925 of 1,748,000,000, this means that more than 24,000,000 persons are automobile owners. The figures reveal that the United States leads with the highest ratio to population—one to every six persons. Hawaii has one to every eleven, and Canada one to thirteen. In the lower ratios is Afghanistan, with one to 1,200,000 persons; Hejaz, with only four cars, or one for every 225,000; Abyssinia, one to 133,333, and China, one for every 31,871. The Solomon islands, with 151,000 persons, have only two automobiles, while Liberia has 54, or one for every 54,259.

In 19 of 59 countries surveyed, at least 90 per cent of the automobiles owned were of American manufacture; in seven, American made cars constituted 80 per cent. South America had the greater proportion, European countries showed a much lower ratio.

RUNIC inscriptions recently found in the state of Washington have been translated by Prof. Oluf Opsjon who declares the discovery is the greatest Norse record ever found in the United States. The first inscriptions, found near Spokane, tell of the journey of a band of vikings across the continent in 1010 A. D. and of their desperate battle with Indians and the burial of their dead. The second group of Runes, in Grant county, Washington, describes Norsemen swimming for their lives across the Columbia river to escape the Indians and starving beneath the river cliffs. It also is dated 1010.

UNDER to new Illinois boxing law Chicago has again become a prize fight center. In the first affair, Sammy Mandell of Rockford captured the lightweight championship from Rocky Kansas of Buffalo. The referee said Sammy outpointed Rocky in the ten-round bout, but his decision was severely criticized.

Brazilian Crisis Laid to Deflated Currency

Rio de Janeiro.—Brazil is faced with an industrial crisis brought about by the increasing value of its money, due largely to the government's policy of deflation by withdrawing a large amount of paper from circulation.

Many wholesalers and retailers have large stocks of manufactured goods on hand which were bought abroad before the milreis had reached its present value. Some of them are compelled to unload their goods for fewer milreis than they paid for them.

One of the largest banks here, the Bank of Recife, has suspended payments and filed a petition in bankruptcy, which was granted. Assets are listed at more than $4,000,000 and the liabilities at nearly that much.

The monetary crisis is considered the principal cause of the failure and a sugar crisis, due to overproduction in the state of Pernambuco, a contributing caur-

Bankers say they would be apprehensive if the milreis continued to rise in value, as commodity sales have fallen off 50 per cent in nine months.

President Bernardes, in an effort to increase confidence, has announced that the government will not force the milreis to the pre-war rate.

The chief sufferers seem to be the textile mills of Sao Paulo, as the high tariff is nullified to a great extent and local manufacturers cannot compete with prices of American and English made goods

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lansing—Financial statistics on the state government of Michigan published recently by the U. S. Department of Commerce, show that collections of property and special taxes increased 145.8 per cent between 1918 and 1924. Between 1924 and 1925 the yield of the same taxes showed a decrease of 1.8 per cent.

Detroit—Telephone rates in Royal Oak will be increased in the near future, the Michigan Bell Telephone company having won authority for such action from the state public utilities commission at Lansing. The order was the first to be issued in connection with the company's statewide application for higher schedules.

Ann Arbor—More than 39 per cent of the students enrolled in the summer session of the University of Michigan hold degrees from colleges throughout the United States, or from this university, according to a report issued by the dean. The 1,496 degrees are held by 1,288 students, some of them holding as many as four degrees.

East Lansing—Faith E. Main, a blind co-ed at the Michigan State College, won the coveted "All-A" rating in the spring term, according to a recent announcement by Elida Yakeley, registrar. Miss Main took the full course and attained the grade of A in all subjects. Only a few other students made the honor list, and with one exception, all were co-eds.

Saginaw—The Saginaw Oil Field had another producting well added to its number recently when the No. 8 well, owned by the Saginaw Prospecting company, showed oil content when the drillers reached a level of 1,811 feet in the berea sand. The new well is the shallowest in depth of any drilled in the local field, adjudged a favorable sign by oil men here.

Port Huron—More than 12,000 automobiles were transported across the St. Clair River at this point the week end of July 4th. With an average of four persons to a car, it is estimated that nearly 50,000 passengers passed in and out of Canada via Port Huron over the week end. All week end records for tourist travel for the Port Huron-Sarnia Ferry Co. were broken.

Mt. Clemens—Upon the heels of agitation for a new water pumping system and a more adequate water supply for Mt. Clemens, has come the announcement that local wells are nearly exhausted because of the drought and some emergency measure must be adopted to curtail water consumption so that an adequate supply may be available in the event of a serious fire.

Detroit—Increase in the personnel of the customs inspection service in the Detroit district will aid materially in stopping smuggling of Canadian liquor across the border, Carey D. Ferguson, United States collector of customs announced recently. Mr. Ferguson also explained his plan to prevent liquor smuggling by rail and expressed hope that Canada would adopt anti-smuggling legislation to keep liquor cargoes from entering American ports.

Pontiac—Eighty-four residents of the village of South Lyons are plaintiffs in a civil suit against the Detroit Panel and Plywood Co. in which they seek the return of $43,000 paid for stock in 1923. They claim the company promised to move its factory from Detroit to South Lyon but before a factory could be completed the company went into the hands of a receiver and the industrial prize the board of commerce had expected to land proved a fizzle.

Kalamazoo—Three separate official investigations of Kalamazoo's fire mystery are under way as a result of the destruction July 7 of the First Presbyterian church with a loss of about $150,000. The officials plan to co-operate in their effort to learn the identity of the pyromaniac believed to be responsible for the destruction of three churches and two lodge halls and the damaging of many other buildings in the last seven months with an aggregate loss of more than $700,000.

Port Huron—Miss Elizabeth Carlisle, teacher of the Washington Junior High school civics class, has received word that Port Huron's entry in the "Better Homes in America" movement won third prize in the 1926 national contest. Miss Carlisle and her class had charge of the construction of the home. In 1923 Port Huron won first prize in the contest and in 1925 a special prize was awarded Port Huron for its model home entry. The 1926 entry was an English type of cottage.

Lansing—Following receipt of reports of the heavy Fourth of July casualty list in Detroit and other cities in the state, Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck has directed Charles V. Lane, chief of the State Fire Marshal's division of the Department of Public Safety, to confer with the Attorney-General's office with a view to preparing an "iron-clad law prohibiting the sales and use of fireworks to children." "The safety of children should be the first consideration of the State, as well as of the muncipalities," Gov. Groesbeck said.

Lansing—An application has been granted the state for an order quieting title to the State Fair Grounds in Detroit, and holding that the state did not have to pay taxes to the City. The city obtained a lien on the property when the State refused to pay about $20,000 special assessment for paving and sewers. The court held the property was used for governmental purposes and not taxable. It also was held that a municipality was a creature of the state and it was therefore impossible for the City to sell State land to satisfy the lien.

Saginaw—Electors of Frankenmuth by a vote of 94-2 approved the sale of the municipal power plant in the village to the Consumers Power Company. The state rate will be given residents of Frankenmuth.

East Lansing—Editors from 13 states were at the fourteenth annual convention of the American Association of Agricultural Editors, which met July 7-9, at the Michigan State College for the first time in its history.

Mt. Clemens—Macomb County deputy sheriffs and James Murphy, a Detroit detective, are endeavoring to trace thieves who rifled the alms box of St. Gertrude's church, at New Baltimore, eight miles northeast of here the night of July 4.

Petoskey—Northern Michigan Odd Fellows and Rebekahs gathered at Indian River state park July 5th to help celebrate the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of American independence. Thousands attended, every family bringing friends.

Ionia—An unusually small number of teachers quit the schools at the close of the last school year, and all but one place has been filled for next year. A. A. Rather remains as superintendent, and Lloyd T. Smith as principal of the high school.

Detroit—Detroit's Fourth of July cost 14 lives—seven Sunday and seven Monday—while several other Detroiters died in drownings and accidents upstate. Of those killed in and near the city, seven died in traffic, two were drowned, and five were burned.

Marquette—A Fourth of July celebration at Marquette branch prison was featured by four baseball games among the inmates. Monday was a general holiday at the prison, with two special meals, moving pictures, band and orchestra concerts and an athletic program.

Sault Ste. Marie—Because Mrs. Esther Keeler refused to give her son James, 16, money to buy gasoline for his auto, he beat her almost to unconsciousness, breaking two ribs and badly bruising her face. It is believed that the mother will not live, as pneumonia has developed. The son is now under arrest.

Grand Rapids—Mrs. Clyde Brown, 34, wife of a Pennsylvania railroad man, committed suicide here July 4, presumably jealous of her husband's attention to other women. In a note left for her husband, she begged forgiveness for "disgracing" him, and instructed hi mto give the best of care to "Billie" a huge tiger cat of which she was very fond.

Marquette—Henry Krause, trusty at Marquette branch prison, who made his getaway recently while working in the lumber yard, was captured by a guard, who found him walking along a road about four miles from here. No trace has been found of Bert Farrar, another trusty, who escaped while driving a prison car. Officials expressed the belief that Farrar fled with a woman in another automobile.

Menominee—Arley Emmes, 23 years old, airplane parachute jumper, was drowned here July 5th when he leaped from a plane above the city and fell into Green Bay. Emmes and John Sporrer, aviator, had been giving an Independence Day exhibition at a park. Emmes jumped with the parachute and the wind carried him out over the water. Although he succeeded in freeing himself from the parachute he sank.

Sault St. Marie—A 600-pound moose is dead here as a result of a rampage through the city which ended only when the animal was drowned in a power canal. The animal crossed the river from Canada, raced across lawns and gardens and blindly on into the waters of the canal. The current carried the moose against the guard gates at the Michigan Northern Power Company, and when finally reached was dead from exhaustion and drowning.

Marquette—The controversy which started here over an ordinance banning fireworks resulted in the rescinding of the ban and youngsters shot off firecrackers to their hearts' content on the Fourth. A special meeting of the city commission amended the ordinance to allow the use of fireworks in accordance with the state law. The sane fourth rule was adopted in 1917 and city officials had not tried to enforce it until this year, when agitation caused its annullment.

Iron Mountain—A search for the instigators of a plot to shoot and dynamite a path to freedom from the Marquette branch prison here, is under way with Alfred Hanson, former Detroit policeman, one of the principal suspects. Dynamite and guns were found in Hanson's cell. Two of the guns were found in the cell of Rev. Daniel F. Tucker, former Methodist minister of lower Michigan, who is serving a long term for criminal assault upon his 10-year-old daughter.

Clare—Several forest fires in Clare County, most of them being along the Ann Arbor Railroad track and evidently set by the sparks from the locomotives, recently assumed dangerous proportions. Deputy Warden Lambert and a large force of men are working night and day to keep these fires under control. Several unoccupied buildings north of Lake George have been destroyed and cottages at some of the other lakes have been threatened. The fire hazard is increased by the dry weather and the fallen timber and brush.

Detroit—The largest lumber yard fire here in seven years destroyed about 8,000,000 feet of lumber and killed 17 horses when flames swept the big F. M. Sibley company's plant, at Conners' avenue and the Grand Trunk railroad, near the Seven-Mile road, shortly before 6 o'clock the morning of the Fourth. It was the biggest fire ever to be recorded on a Fourth of July in the history of Detroit. The damage is estimated at $400,000. Hard work by firemen saved more than 2,000,000 feet of lumber and also adjoining property.

YOUTH IS HELD AS BROTHER'S SLAYER

The body of Walter Ignaszak, 10 years old, was dug from a shallow grave under the front porch of his home in Detroit by detectives. He had been shot through the head. Police have under arrest the dead youth's brother, John, 18 years old, in connection with the murder, which is said to have been committed in the home.

After dragging the body from the front room through to the rear of the house, the slayer paused long enough to pick a rose from a bush in the back yard.

Then the body was carried through the basement to a small window which opened under the front porch. Before covering the body with earch the slayer placed the rose on the breast of the bead boy, covered him with paper and filled the grave.

Ignaszak had been working at a restaurant. His mother, Mrs. Louise Ignaszak, said she last saw the boy alive when he left his home to go to work.

When the mother returned home Wednesday night at 9 o'clock she said she waited for her son to return from work. His failure to return at the usual hour caused her to make inquiries at the restaurant, where she learned he had not reported for the night shift.

Shortly after his arrest John Ignaszak confessed to detectives that he had accidentally shot his brother, and, through fear, buried him under the porch of their home. In view of the fact that Walter's body, when exhumed, showed signs of a severe beating, officials are inclined to doubt the story.

Grand River Helps to Mould State's History

The Grand river has had much to do with the history and location of many towns in that part of the state. The distance from Jackson to Grand Haven, as the crow flies, is less than 100 miles, but as the Grand pursues its serpentine course, it covers 240 miles.

The Grand, three sections of which lie in Eaton county, flowing into the west side of the countyy in as many different places, has its origin in the Bundy hills, on the line between Jackson and Hillsdale counties. This is the highest point of land in the southern part of the state, being more than 1,000 feet above sea level. The St. Joseph, Kalamazoo and Raisin rivers also have their beginning within a few miles of the Bundy hills, all by the Raisin flowing toward the west.

Far famed for its beautiful scenery, the Grand has been passing through a stage that threatened to destroyy much of its loveliness. Great manufacturing concerns adn towns through which it flows have bee polluting it. A few years ago there was good fishing at many points along the river. Now one scarcely detects a minnow. The state conservation department is making an effort to restore the stream to its original condition and the towns along it are co-operating.

Detroit Boy Gives Life To Rescue His Pet Dog

Sebastian Marcilla, 8 years old, of Detroit, gave up his life to save his life to save his dog. They picked up the lad from the traffic at Michigan avenue and Thirty-first street, Detroit, fatally injured. He died in Receiving hospital.

The story was told by F. W. Bower, 33 years old, of Romulus, Mich., in front of whose car Sebastian dashed in an attempt to retrieve his pup from the wheels of another vehicle.

General Motors' expansion program, Alfred P. loan, Jr., president, said in his letter to stockholders, the extending Sof facilities in motor car manufacture to take care of a substantial and already demonstrated increased demand for the corporation's products, creating a new system of motor car transportation which will result in substantial profit as well as extending the sale of General Motors products, effecting important improvements in efficiency of operation through better coordination of chassis and body manufacture and improving the corporation's position in electrical refrigeration, a rapidly developing new industry.

Budd Lake Perch Scorn Fish Lure

The perch is a commoner. He chooses no favorites. The barefoot boy and his bent pin and angleworm catch him as readily as the expensively outfitted angler with his spinner. It is no trick at all to hook the little green back, the sunburned, broad-hatted still fisherman says—that is, if you don't fish at Budd Lake.

Budd Lake is within the corporate limits of the village of Harrison, and in the Wilson State Park, below Houghton Lake. It is about a mile and a half long, a half mile wide, and its deep, blue waters contain thousands of perch. Tremendous schools of the favorite pan fish may be seen feeding along the bottom if you peer down into the water from the side of a punt—tantalizingly big perch, too.

"What a great place to get a string of those fellows," you exclaim to the first native you meet. He looks at you with a twinkle in his eye, or perhaps he laughs outright.

The perch of Budd Lake are sophisticates—wiseacres—they won't bite!

Dredge and Shovel Destroying Marshes That Shelter Ducks

One by one the ducking marshes of the country are being devoured by the insatiable dredge and steam shovel. One of the latest conquests of this destroyer is the great marsh area near Monroe, Mich., on the west end of Lake Erie.

Some 20 square miles of the finest duck hunting ground in the country has been transformed into a real estate "development" with its paved streets, town lots, 'real estaters" and rows of wooden bungalows.

This place, where hundreds of men with gum boots, duck boats, decoys, guns and retrievers were wont to seek the flocks of quacking waterfowl in fields of wild rice from time immemorial, will know such joyful quest no more.

Some of the state governments are moving as rapidly as they can to protect valuable marsh areas for the use of wild life.

Grand Traverse Bay Magnet For Craft

Every sort of craft, from the leaky old flat-bottomed rowboat and rafts the children made out of old logs to passenger steamers plying between Chicago and Traverse City will make ripples on Grand Traverse Bay this season.

These bays offer the speed boat enthusiasts or the yachtsmen who prefer the "wind jammer" everything necessary in the way of boating.

Ford's Island, the property of Henry Ford, stands like a rough emerald in the center of Grand Traverse Bay.

Boy Drowns After Rescuing Two Girls

Henry Dirks, 18 years old, of Waverly, was drowned after he and his brother had rescued two girls who had waded into a deep hole in the Kalamazoo river.

The girls, Erma Gibbon, 15 years old, and Ruth Rooks, 16 years old, of Zeeland, were screaming for help when Dirks and his brother, Albert, went to them. The two had succeeded in getting the girls in their canoe when the wake of a passing steamer upset the craft. Henry was exhausted and sank.

End of Pollution of State's Streams By Cities Forecast

A decided improement in Michigan lakes and streams in the near future as the result of the campaign inaugurated recently by the State Health and Conservation Departments against pollution, is predicted by Homer Murphy, deputy conservation commissioner, in his report.

"Co-operation has been expressed by industrial and municipal officials. All reports and investigations indicate that the most serous form of pollution is caused by municipal wastes. In many cases municipal sewage includes industrial wastes and when the municipal wastes are removed or purified, the industrial wastes will automatically be removed. By this method there will be a comparatively small number of industries not having access to municipal sewage systems," his report stated.

"No stream or lake can be used for the disposal of wastes, either industrial or municipal, to the menace of acquatic life, hunting or recreation."

Cooper's Hawk Most Destructive to Birds

The Cooper's howk is undoubtedly the most destructive of Michigan's hawk family. This is due to its size and wide distribution and can be held most responsible for the general prejudice aganist all birds of prey.

It is an active and graceful bird. Living in the dense woods, it preys almost entirely on birds and small mammals, which it seizes as they pass in flight.

It is a bold, cunning and restless hawk, more vigilant and industrious than many others, seldom seen in the open or caught in the act of killing its victim, for it works swiftly. It curises silently along the edge of the forest, making quick, short sallies into the open, returning immediately with its prey and alights only long enough to devour it.

Life Convict Sends Gift to Man Who Jailed Him

Although he must spend the remainder of his life behind prison bars at Marquette for murder, Howard Mullen holds no enmity toward the man who sent him there.

This was evidenced when James E. Chenot, Detroit's assistant prosecutor, opened a package at his office and found a string of colorful glass beads, the gift of Mullen for Chenot's wife. A note attached to the beads expressed the prisoner's good will.

Bandits Pick on Bank; Third Visit Nets $9,400

For the third time in two years, a branch of the Michigan State bank in Detroit, was robbed when two armed bandits with a third waiting outside, escaped with $9,400 from the vault.

John Grutcynski, the acting manager; Bernard Karamond, clerk, and two customers were forced to lie on the floor while the bandits helped themselves to the cash.

French Boat Will Vie at Detroit for Trophy Sept. 4-6

Formal challenge for the British International (Harmsworth. trophy has been received by J. Lee Barrett, secretary of the Yachtman's Association of America. This is evidence that the French boat is to be in Detroit to compete with the boats of Com. Gar Wood of he D. Y. C., H. Alex Johnson of the Columbia Y. C., New York City, and a boaot entered by two employes of the Horace E. Dodge Boat Works, for the world's power boat championship.

This practically assures a race for the Harmsworth trophy, held by Gar Wood since 1920, during the tenth annual Detroit regetta, September 4 to 6, on the Detroit River.

Mother Outwits Law, Flees With Her Child

Mrs. Waneta Jones, a Detroit woman, outwitted the law and escaped from the Kent county building at Grand Rapids with her son, Stuart Jones, 11 years old, after her former husband, Harold Jones, Grand Trunk telegraph operator at Battle Creek, had obtained an order in court giving him custody of the child.

Before the order could be drawn up and served, the mother motioned to the boy who joined her and the two fled without being noticed by the court clerk.

New Water Turned To Fish Hatchery In Improvement Plan

Several improvements will be made immediately in the Grayling Fish Hatchery recently purchased by the state from the Grayling Fish and Hatchery Club. An additional source of water supply from springs and wells adjacent to the grounds will be directed into the breeding pounds. This hatchery is considered one of the best in the state for the rearing of brook trout.

Except for the new size and creel limits established this year on most of the game fish, two rulings of the legislature should be carefully observed.

The first is that only two poles can be used by the fisherman out of a boat. This was done so that the fisherman could cast with one while the other was being used in still fishing.

The other rule controls trolling, which is not allowable from a motor boat or one propelled by an outboard motor. Fishermen will have to stick to the oars this year for trolling.

Four Great Grandfathers at Child's Natal Party

The celebration held for the four-months-old Barbara Jean Case at Marshall, to mark the fourth month of her existence, probably was unique in the social annals of Calhoun county, for the guests of honor were Barbara Jean's four great granfathers.

As far as is known she is the only child in Michigan to boast of four great grandparents surviving.

Farm Produce Cars Held Not Commercial

The state department of public safety has announced a ruling to the effect that passenger automobiles used by farmers for transporting produce would not be classed as commercial vehicles. This will make it unnecessary for farmers to equip such cars with commercial vehcile licenses.

Form Big "Kinderband"

One of the largest kinderbands in the state, an organization of youngsters playing bells, tambourines, triangles and drums, has been trained at Stanton by Mrs. Mabel Carpenter, daughter of State Senator Herrick. Mrs. Carpenter's band consists of 20 children, all skilled in their rhythmetical performance.

PHONE TOLL RATES IN STATE CHANGED

The Michigan Public Utilities' Commission has reasserted its jurisdiction over rates of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company by issuing an order readjusting toll rates throughout the state.

The order does not raise or lower the average long distance charges. It changes the steps in the mileage scale so that charges are based on blocks of six miles instead of eight. This results in an increase on calls over short distances. There is a similar decrease on calls over distances of 100 miles.

The first of a series of telephone rate orders for individual cities were issued by the Public Utilities Commission, raising rates in Royal Oak, Muir and Lyons.

The Royal Oak order, made on application of the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., raises rates from 75 cents to $1.12 a telephone.

The Royal Oak exchange was most complained of in hearings before the commission on rate adjustment. The Royal Oak rates were as low as those of small cities out-State, although Royal Oak users had the benefit of a much larger "free" telephoning area.

The Muir and Lyons increases are made for the Union Telephone Co., because of consolidation of service. The amount of increase varies from 50 cents downward.

Other individual city orders are expected to be issued by the commission this week.

Arrest Rich Farmer Under U. S. Act for Eloping With Girl, 17

Charles Kirkpatrick, wealthy farmer and church worker of McGregor, Mich., who was arrested on a federal warrant charging violation of the Mann act, was arraigned at Port Huron before United States Commissioner F. R. Snell. Kirkpatrick demanded an examination and this was set for July 15. He was released on $3,500 bail and returned at once to his home at McGregor.

The disappearance of the farmer and the girl created a sensation at the time. Kirkpatrick's abandoned automobile was found on the edge of the lake, and in it were notes from both indicating they had committed suicide. They were not heard of again until Kirkpatrick returned home and frankly admitted his affair with the girl.

Pere Marquette Merger With Nickel Plate Is Up

A special committee of Pere Marquette railway directors was appointed at the regular monthly board meeting in New York to negotiate the terms under which that railroad would be included in the revised Nickel Plate merger. If agreement is reached, as now seems certain, the formal Van Sweringen plan will be in shape for consideration by the interstate commerce commission before August 1.

Rev. Scott preached an interesting sermon Sunday evening dealing with racial relations. Mr. Scott placed emphasis on the mistaken belief held by the white people that they were "better" and "superior" to the people of other races after all is said and done, the Rev. is probably about right in his conclusions for it must be admitted when it comes to a showdown that the Chinese, a yellow race, ranks first in importance from the viewpoint of history. China is the only nation that ever existed or does exist which has an unbroken historical record for 4,000 years and it is the only nation which ever existed 4,000 years yet found itself more powerful at the end of that period than at its beginning. The Chinese invented the printing press and gun powder several hundred years before any of the white nations of today were on the map and in addition the Chinese probably held the world's record when it comes to the subject of conflict, for China during its 4,000 years has had less wars than the U. S. had had in the 150 years of its existence which proves that christian America pays little attention to the christ it pretends to worship. China has more people than the United States, England, Germany, France, Spain, Belgium, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland combined and the chances are that if some of the white nations like England and the U. S. do not apologize and make friends of China that China make chop suey out of some of us westerners during the next 50 years.

Mrs. Hubert Haight of Detroit, who has been at the U. of M. Hospital for a goitre operation was brought to the home of her husband's parents, Alfred Haight and wife on Sunday and is reported as gaining nicely.

The following young ladies are spending the week at Manitou Beach, Devils Lake; Kathleen McFarland, Geraldine Cox, Leah Holcomb, Margray Hayhoe, Lillian Pendell, Genevieve Roberts, Marjory Frances and Jean Young from the village and vicinity and Percibelle Young of Jackson.

Devils Lake has claimed another victim. This time it is the nine year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sears of Bowling Green Ohio. On Thursday evening last the child was seized with cramps and drowned in sight of her mother who knew nothing of it at the time. The body was recovered a few minutes afterward and a pulmotor secured from Adrian but all attempts at resusitation were fruitless. Dr. Growt worked faithfully for two hours but could get no results. It seems they are a little lax down at the lake and ought to be chicked up slightly into keeping at least a half dozen pulmotors around the place instead of being obliged to depend on some distant city for service. This seems like kid work. All first aid appliances should be kept on the grounds.

He Mixed Us Up

Our Devil got hold of a couple of items the other day and the way he fussed things up around our office was a fright. We had told him to go over to the barber shop and fetch us a couple of straight lines, then we asked him to go down to the blacksmith for a left handed shooting stick; upon his return we showed him one of the eternal nuisances of the print-shop, a type louse.

The Devil no doubt sufiered a brain storm from so much in little and that's the way he turned out.

We had an article about resusitating a drowned person and a recipe. The result sounds like an essay written by a bug house student:

"Hands on hips; place a cup of flour on the shoulders, raise knees and depress the toes and mix thoroughly with one-half cup of milk. Repeat six times; inhale quickly one-half teaspoonful of baking powder. Lower the legs and mash two hard-boiled eggs in a sieve, exhale; breathe naturally and sift into a bowl. Attention! lie flat on the floor and roll the white of an egg backward and forward until it comes to a boil. In ten minutes remove from the fire and rub smartly with a rough towel. Breathe naturally, dress in flannels and serve with fish soup."

Modern Science To Aid Farm Gathering

Standing on a platform under the trees of the M. S. C. campus, speakers at the annual summer Farmers Day at the college will talk to a crowd of thousands. And these speakers will be heard distinctly hundreds of feet from the platform, even though they talk in an ordinary tone of voice.

The latest developments of science will make this possible. Perfected voice amplifiers, using the equipment of the college radio station, will carry the words from the speakers' stand out through loud speakers to the gathered throng.

More than 8,000 farmers and their wives gathered for the Farm Day meeting last summer. Without the amplifiers, it would have been impossible to hold the big afternoon meeting. No building on the campus would house the crowd and no public speaker could possibly reach so many people out of doors, without the aid of science.

Band concerts and other special entertainment numbers are to be mixed with the more serious talks of the Farm Day program, which will be held right after the picnic lunch at noon.

Many of Michigan's most interesting farm activities are being photographed this summer by a camera expert from the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Washington. Starting from the M. S. C. on July 13, Mr. George Ackerman the government photographer, is following out an itinerary which will carry him through nearly half the counties of the state during a two weeks trip.

HOME WIPED OUT

On Tuesday afternoon about 2:00 the children of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Lake, who resided on the Lew Updpke farm south-east of this village near the Bross School House in some manner obtained matches and started a bonfire near the barn. with the disasterous result that a holocaust was launched which destroyed every building on the place but one, and left the family homeless. The burning barn threw sparks which quickly ignited other buildings, and aided by a stiff breeze at the time the blaze soon laid all in ashes. A small amount of furniture and clothing only was saved. Neighbors flocked to the place but nothing could be done. Mr. and Mrs. Lake are particularly unfortunate in having no insurance whatever. The loss probably totals up to $3,500. The family are stopping with the Rawsons on the James Elliott farm.

Sunday Evening Services

The temperance program at the Congregational church on Sunday evening last under auspices of the W. C. T. U. proved to be a success both in attendance and the interest shown. The house was comfortably filled and people were present from Hillsdale and other points outside this community. An excellent program had been prepared under direction of Mrs; Laura Walworth.

Rev. Reiser expounded the Scripture, Mrs. Hunt sang a solo; Readings were given by Edward Wylie and Ethel Clement and Mrs Hattie Kempton. Miss Clement called attention to some of the world's celebrities who are members of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Kempton gave some interesting statistics concerning church citizenship. Among other things she stated there were over eight million young people in this country under the influence of the Catholic church and a large conglomeration of protestant young people who were under no church domination. but could be moulded to conform to practically any belief. She deplored the fact so many young folks were immune from any church or Sunday school training. Drills and exercises were given by juveniles; Miss Lillian Pendell gave an appropriate reading. Rev. Wylie led in the reading of a temperance decalogue.

After the preliminary exercises Mrs. Walworth stated she had engaged both the Sheriff and Prosecuting Attorney to speak at the meeting but Sheriff Midgley had to cancel his appointment on account of a meeting of sheriffs he wanted to attend and at the 11th hour Prosecutor Lewis stated he would have to be excused on account of sickness in his wife's family, but he sent a substitute in the person of Judge Arthur Guernsey of the Probate Court.

In preliminary remarks the Judge said he presumed it was a mistake for Mr. Lewis to claim he had sent a better speaker, but the audience did not think this statement according to Blackstone and it was stricken out.

Among other things the Judge stressed the necessity of laws being made not more numerously but less complicated. There should be in Congressional committees which draft these laws, men of actual experience enforcing them—that they may know all the contradictions and snags which smart lawyers are likely to put up on both sides of the question. In other words, fewer and more discretionary laws ought to be on the statute books of Michigan to help in the prosecution of criminals. He cited the instance of a sheriff who wanting to search an alleged blind pig would expect to get a "search and seizure" warrant from a local justice of the peace, but if the justice was away and feeling the time was ripe, might go ahead and search the premises without a warrant, thus creating a technicality in the case and blocking proceedings.

The Judge scouted the idea of the "wet propaganda" which is being put out trying to convince the world more liquor is sold now than under high license laws. He believes this is pure bunk from his own observation in Hillsdale. He especially recommends that temperance people keep on the job, for as long as there is life, there is hope, in the wet forces. The meeting closed with a medley of national airs by the orchestra and benediction by Rev. M. D. Carrel.

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Congregational church will meet in the church parlors Wednesday afternoon, August 4.

Mrs. Clara Culver of Jackson accompanied by her daughter and husband, Arthur Tupper and wife visited on Sunday at the Knowles home in North Adams.

Mrs. Mary Kinney Curtis and daughters of Fremont, Michigan who were called here by the illness of Mrs. Sarah Kinney, returned home to Fremont Monday.

U. S. LEARNS ONE IN 71 OWNS AUTO

Michigan, the cradle of the automobile industry, is vitally interested in the figures compiled by the U. S. Department of Commerce showing that 24,000,000 persons in the world are automobile owners and of this number nearly 90 per cent are American made cars.

The automobile has invaded every nook and corner of the globe and in such quantity that an owner is to be found for every 71st person. On the basis of 1,738,000,000 world population for 1925, this means that more than 34,000,000 persons are automobile owners.

The figures, announced by the Department of Comerce, revealed also that the United States has the greatest number of automobiles and the highest ratio of such vehicles to population, with one to every six persons. Hawaii has one to every 11, and Canada one to every 13.

In the lower ratios is found Afghanistan, with one to 1,200,000 persons; Hejaz, with only four cars, or one for every 225,000; Abyssinia, one to 133,333, and China, with one for every 31,871 inhabitants. The Solomon Islands, with 151,000 persons, has only two automobiles, while Liberia has 54, or one for every 54,259.

In 19 out of the 59 countries surveyed, at least 90 per cent of the automobiles owned were of American manufacture, while in seven American made cars constituted at least 80 per cent. South American countries had the greater proportion of American cars, while European countries showed a much lower ratio.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CONQUERED

You can be permanently relieved from the distressing diseases, Hay Fever and Asthma. No matter of how long standing or how violent your case may be, permanent relief may be obtained in most cases by the use of HIMALYA.

"Gentlemen:-

"Replying to yours of the 11th instant, will say that I am glad to add one more testimonial to the praise of HIMALYA. I am 44 years old and when I was 15 years of age I began to suffer with Asthma, and the paroxysms got worse and more frequent for the next ten years, until I could rest no way when an attack was on; but thanks to 'HIMALYA' I am well and I suffer no more from Asthma, and as it has been ten years since I was cured, I feel that the cure is permanent, but should it ever recur, I would send for another treatment of HIMALYA. I had used every remedy I could hear of, all to no good, but HIMALYA gave me relief from the start. HIMALYA is the one great boon for Asthma and Hay Fever sufferers, and I will always be glad to recommend it to all who suffer with same. As ever.

HELD AS SWINDLER OF GOTHAM SAILOR

Kent Morgan, alias Joseph P. Moore, arrested in a Detroit hotel, is held at the Detroit Police Headquarters awaiting the arrival of detectives from New York City, for whom he was arrested in connection with an alleged plot to rob George de Forest Barton, a retired naval paymaster, of a fortune of $300,000.

The New York police, in their communication to Detroit, accused Morgan of swindling Barton of more than $20,000 and Morgan, according to detectives, who arrested him, has confessed he got $8,400 from the sailor. Despite this, Morgan waived extradition and announced himself eager to return to New York to fight the charges.

Morgan, the New York police said, posed as an agent of the company which handles Barton's financial affairs and by this means obtained a blank check to which he signed the name of Joseph P. Moore and filled out for $8,400. In addition, he is accused of getting more than $10,000 worth of bonds, ostensibly for deposit with the trust company, but which he is said to have converted to his own use. An alleged accomplice, Thomas Corchorn, was arrested in New York.

Barton, 85 years old, is the last surviving member of the crew of the Swatara, the ship which pursued and captured John Suratt, one of the men who plotted with John Wilkes Booth to assassinate Abraham Lincoln. Suratt was arrested in Alexandria Egypt.

Shingling Bee Puts Roof on Barn of Manistee Farmer

Years ago when Manistee County farmers were favored with weather which brought rich harvests and high prices, when Haugen bills and congressional warfare over co-operative marketing were unheard of, they found it possible to engage more actively in the social phase of life—together for the old-time barn dances, to hold quilting, husking and many other kinds of "bees."

Conditions, however, forced many changes in the lives of the husbandmen; they have been compelled to abandon sociability to a great extent for the more essential problem of making both ends meet.

But Mr. and Mrs. August Lipkowski, owners of a large acreage off Wick-a-te-wah, Portage Lake summer resort, revived the dormant social life of the farmer. Despite the fact that the seventh day is one of rest, about 40 farmers gathered together for a good old-fashioned "shinglin' bee."

Mr. Lipkowski recently built a large barn, but due to the scarcity of labor was forced to call upon his neighbors to finish the job. Every one called upon responded.

Freak Perch Found In Grand Rapids Pond

Perch of a freakish variety were found in a pond near Grand Rapids by Dwight Lydell, assistant superintendent of hatcheries in the state.

Lydell was directing the work of a gang of men who were seining perch for propagation purposes. The fish, of which 30 or 40 were netted, is about five inches in length. It resembles the normal perch in every way except the head.

The lower jaw protrudes and upper jaw drops almost perpendicularly from the eyesocket, giving the fish a shovel-shaped mouth. The eyes bulge like those of a bull frog and the gill covers stand out from the side of the head at a wide angle, giving the fish a flat headed appearance when viewed from above.

State's Oldest Clerk Is Serving in Presque Isle

In point of service Presque Isle county lays claim to the oldest county clerk in Michigan. Eugene D'Vincent has held the office uninterruptedly 20 years, being first elected at the election in 1906. In the 10 campaigns in which he has been a candidate he has been opposed several times.

The only county official who has seen more continuous terms in office was the late George Rutson, of Alcona county, who served as clerk nearly 0 ye3ars. Montmorency county has an old timer in the clerk's office in George McClenathen, who has passed 16 years as clerk of that county.

Michigan Generous In Share Toward U. S. Income Taxes

Michigan contributed generously to the bumper crop of internal revenue taxes collected by the Federal Treasury Department in the fiscal year ending —une 30, it is disclosed in figures made public.

Despite reductions in the income and excise taxes effective in some cases on Jan. 1 of this year, Michigan's total contribution to the internal revenue in the fiscal year was $225,455,226. This was $29,725,732 greater than in the preceding fiscal year of 1925.

MOOSE IS DROWNED IN POWER CANAL

The victim of its would-be friends, a 600-pound moose lies dead in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., drowned or choked to death as he was being towed out of the head race of the Michigan Northern Power company's canal toward the canal bank.

The fight for life of the moose, which had dived into the swift waters of the power canal after having crossed St. Mary's river safey from Canada and made a wild fight through the city, west to east, was witnessed by several hundred citizens.

The animal, unable to swim against the swift current of the canal, was carried down against the steel racks which filter the waters just above the giant hydro turbines. He struggled against these steel bars, becoming weaker and weaker as the workmen at the power plant organized with ropes and pike poles to rescue him. Finally the current carried the moose into the narrow head race between the two sections of bars and in this race the workmen were able to swing down a rope around the neck of the animal and prevent it from being swept down to death in the falls below.

Having done this, however, a means of getting the moose from its predicament was found most difficult. A rope 600 feet long was obtained, attached to the neck of the moose as it struggled for life, then a score of workmen on shore lustily hauled in while others with poles tried to keep its head above the surging waters.

During the five-minute haul to shore the moose ceased its struggles.

Veteran Lost in Detroit Jail for More Than Month

Life has played some droll jokes on the men who served in the World war. It sent some back to the rear ranks of society to shamble along with broken, twisted bodies, and hopes no higher than the dependence of a pension from Uncle Sam. It has been a grim drill-master to many, who lost out in the parade of ambition when they responded to the assembly call of war.

But it is doubtful if it has harpooned many with more relentless savagery than Marion Ferguson, 39 years old, who was released from the Wayne county jail after spending 37 days there on a "fluke."

He might have been detained during the rest of his life but for the fact that he was accidentally discoverde in jail by Miles N. Culehan, a Detroit attornye and World war veteran.

Plymouth Bowlder to Be Unveiled at Urbandale August 2

A bowlder from near Plymouth Rock, upon which the Pilgrim Fathers first set foot upon American soil, will be unveiled at the village of Urbandale, four miles west of Battle Creek, Aug. 2, to commemorate the founding of the village by the late Senator James Henry and also to mark the starting point of the first Michigan automobile caravan bound for the Pacific coast.

The bowlder will come to Battle Creek by automobile relay from Plymouth Rock, via Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, Cleveland and Detroit. This stone, which was selected by W. T. Elredge, chairman, of Plymouth, bears the inscription, "Plymouth Rock to Golden Gate." A second stone will be planted in Seattle, Wash., Aug. 29; a third in San Francisco, facing the Golden Gate, in December; a fourth, set in a bronze tablet at San Diego, Calif., where the first trans-continental tour of the Michigan grange tours will terminate.

RETAIL SALES TOP 1ST HALF OF 1925

Six months of exceptional activity have recorded a business volume well above normal for the half year just ended says the July issue of Business and Investment. Aggregate retail merchandise sales and profits therefrom should show a substantial gain above the record attained during the first half of last year. Indications point to favorable business in this field for the summer months ahead. Building operations and motor car production have been maintained at levels surprisingly high.

These divisions have been the two major factors of general business and, while definite curtailment in each is already in evidence, it is believed that the sustaining influence of both industries will be felt for several months ahead. Irregularities persist in the industrial structure as a whole and composite indices reflect further declining tendencies in the manifest recession in process for several months. Consumer buying is in large volume, but of the hand to mouth character that precludes capacity operations in manufactures.

$3,176,299 Cost of June Building In Detroit Suburbs

In keeping with the immense construction volume in the city of Detroit, with June totalling $17,376,824, statsitics covering 14 suburbs of the city show a building volume of $3,176,299 in the outlying communities during the past month.

These figures, as furnished to John M. Bischoff, commissioner of the depaartment of building and safety engineering, bring the total building construction for the metropolitan area during June to $20,553,123. This is composed of 5,382 new buildings, additions and alterations.

The total outlay for building construction in the city of Detroit proper, and the metropolitan area during the first six months of the year is shown to reach approximately $111,660,943.

City Tax Levy on Fairgrounds for Street Held Void

Detroit cannot levy taxes against the State Fair grounds for purposes of widening Woodward avenue, it was decided int he Ingham circuit court by Judge W. Leland Carr in the test case brought there by the attorney general.

That means that $20,000 claimed by the city as owing for taxes for several years on the property, and for the security of which a lien on the property had been demanded, will not be paid into the city's treasury.

In his ruling, Judge Carr ehld that the city is a municipalility, is in effect the child of the state.

U. S. Machinery of Government Held "Rusty" From Age

"Rusty" machinery of government is carrying on the duties of the United States in a manner fully 125 years behind the times, in the opinion of Professor James K. Pollock of the University of Michigan, political science department, Ann Arbor. Our political system is sadly in need of revision if it is to be carried on effectively, he said.

"In view of the conservatism of our law-making representatives, there is little likelihood of any alteration of the rules in the near future," Professor Pollock asserted. He said that no great change had been made in methods of procedure since 1789.

Defects in the legislative system that tend to slow progress were named by the speaker, such as the rule requiring three readings of a bill when a copy is in the hands of every member. This practice alone consumed 20 working days of the 67th congress, he said, while the inefficient roll call system took 36 working days of the last session.

Fight Over Ownership of Parrot Aired in Court

Arthur E. Gordon, Detroit justice of the peace, heard and decided to the law's satisfaction a bitter dispute between neighbors over the ownership of a nice, quiet parrot.

The case was a replevin action brought by Aaron Kaplan against Mack Weiss. Last May the Kaplans owned a parrot. He was a bespangled creature versed in two languages, a gift to Kaplan's 19-year-old daughter, Beatrice, from an admirer who had had bad luck and won the bird at a raffle. After taking firm hold in the family's affections, the bird flew away. Days of search culminated in the discovery that a parrot strikingly similar in appearance and traits had its abode just across the alley, in the Weiss home. When quizzed, Mr. Weiss contented himself with the provoking remark that his pet must be the victim of mistaken identity. And so the suit, which resulted in Weiss keeping the parrot.

If the hens form a trust they will probably try to control the egg plant.

It is considerably easier to KEEP out of trouble than to GET out.

Road Gives Up Ghost After 53 Years as Link to Muskegon

The discontinuance of passenger service on the Pere Marquette railroad branch between Muskegon and White Cloud this month was in strange contrast to the opening of that service 53 years ago.

The branch was built to give service to the great many lumber camps between Big Rapids and Muskegon, and for years it enjoyed a large patronage. But the woods were stripped of their lumber and freight revenue for the railroad ceased. Then the motor bus came along and took its passenger revenue. So there was nothing to do but give it up.

The WATER BEARER

By J. ALLAN DUNN

THE DIVINER

SYNOPSIS—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyotte pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley.

"Surely. Had to. Still have to. If you ever build a dam anywhere along the line of the Great Fault, don't forget that. Every major quake runs along the same line, out of the sea at a tangent, nor'west to sou'east down the original crack. The big temblor in 1812 that wrecked the Missions, and the quake in 1906 that wrecked Golden and Santa Rosa, moved over an identical trail. And that trail went clean through my big dam down there."

The long lake had once been a peaceful valley, Hinckley told Caleb, a stage road winding through it on the way to the sea, farms, farmhouses and a hamlet with a famous roadhouse at the Crystal Springs for which the valley was named. All these had been razed to prepare the bottom of the great reservoir, fences taken up, trees eliminated, the place devastated as the big dam rose in the great notch that formed the main outlet to the valley.

Caleb turned the talk to the question of Golden's impending shortage.

"Mr. Cox," he said, "stated that there was no more watershed available on the peninsula."

"That is true. We own a certain number of artesian wells around the lower end of the bay but they are only a drop in the bucket. The outlook is not very encouraging."

"How about across the bay?" Caleb put the query with a degree of nervousness. He feared that Hinckley was about to uncover his own precious theory and demolish it.

The engineer's eyes twinkled.

"They say that water, like gold, is where you find it. And findings—keepings! There is water over there that ethically belongs to Oakville. Our company naturally considers Golden more important. But it is difficult of development. Means large expenditure. We should have a hard job to get water rates raised sufficiently to warrant it. Filtration is the big trouble. The work would be elaborate and expensive. We can't see our way clear."

Caleb kept his face clear of everything but earnest attention. But he was breathing more easily. His theory was still virgin.

Hinckley proceeded to go into the present filtration system and the layout of the conduits that supplied the hydrants of Golden. Caleb's interest in Crystal lakes had been satisfied but he followed the technical talk with intelligent comment and left the engineer at last on terms that were more than merely friendly. He reached Golden after the stores were closed for the day but, early the next morning he obtained geodetic section maps of the quadrangles covering Caliente valley and the Gabilan range. He put in most of the day studying these and making little drawings to scale in vertical plane.

It was all in support of a mere theory but it was his habit to be painstaking, even in preliminaries, and he surveyed his sketches with a good deal of satisfaction. If the theory panned out it meant, not merely money and fame if he handled his discovery properly, but it would make him, Caleb Warner, an actual factor in pioneering, in city building. He quoted to himself what Betty Clinton had said at El Nido.

"That is what I should prefer, if I was a man. To create something, to be a water-bearer, to the thirsty earth or to thirsty people."

Baxter, coming in, broke through his reverie.

"You look like a latter-day prophet seeing visions," said Baxter. "What's the big idea?"

"Just a hunch, so far, Ted. I'm going across the bay tomorrow," prospecting."

The other looked at him oddly.

"Expect to uncover a gold mine at El Nido? Beware of the sirens who lie behind the rocks! As I remember her, that day at the dog show, the Clinton girl was a looker. Beware!"

"I'm not looking for that kind of a mine, Ted. And I hadn't thought of going to El Nido this trip. You seem fairly happy yourself."

"I am. I've heard from my parties in the land deal. They'll be out in a few weeks. Probably some time next month. Thereby greatly relieving the general situation. Now it's up to me to attend to the little formality of finding the land to please them. I wonder if there's anything across the bay? I must look up my notes. Want me to come along with you, Cal? I wonder if the El Nido valley is for sale?"

He glanced mockingly at Caleb and laughed.

"Old Chief Wooden Face, aren't you? Don't worry. I won't butt in to poach on your preserves. Give my regards to Miss Clinton. She may vaguely remember me. I was introduced to her at the Show. But, remember my warning. Stoics like you, when they fall, fall hard!"

CHAPTER VI

The Diviner

Caleb caught an early ferry for the six-mile water trip across the bay from Golden to Oakville. At Oakville he took a local train that paralleled the shore of the lower bay for a time before striking east through Coyote canyon, the natural gateway through the hills for the overland trains. As he had done on Hermanos creek, Caleb noted flood signs. Then he gave himself up to studying his sketches, covering the region he was going to prospect, going over them while the train tugged up the canyon until he knew them by heart.

He left the train at the same station he had used on his previous trip, buying some fruit to serve as luncheon before he crossed the bridge and started up Hermanos. He had brought along rod and creel, more as a mask to his real intentions than from any idea of fishing.

The Long Lake Had Once Been a Peaceful Valley.

The scanty flow ran in a deep channel gouged out by floods. He examined the sides and found them all of gravel. A wagon road that had followed the creek up from the railroad turned off to wind behind a low ridge. It was deep-rutted and Caleb traced it. He found that it ended at a gravel pit, dug into the side of the ridge, used probably for roadmaking purposes. The pit had been bitten out in the shape of a horseshoe and, standing where one of the calks would come, he saw a dilapidated shed from the roof of which smoke was rising through a rusty stove pipe. A man, leaning against the open door, surveyed him curiously.

Caleb nodded to him as he walked over to the shack, crunching through the gravel. The man was lank and tall, stooped of shoulder and constricted of chest. A hooked nose stuck out boldly from the peaked and sunken face between eyes that glittered strangely. Long hair fell below his shirt collar.

As he rested against the door jamb a fit of coughing attacked him and he shook with it like a reed in the wind. He was so helpless in the grip of the attack that Caleb hurried to support him, thinking him about to fall.

But the violent efforts ceased and the man rallied, smiling wanly, with a grimy handkerchief set to his lips. Caleb caught sight of telltale flecks of bright-red blood quickly folded into the rag. The cough was from the lungs, the man tubercular.

"'S all right, stranger," said the man. "I've bin a sight worse. I'm gettin' it baked out of me here. Lungs teched but they're healin'. Fishin', are ye? Better work up to the canyon yonder. No use wastin' yore time down here. Folly the road below the pit an' then trail the crick. It's tough goin'. Sile's chokin', what little they is of it."

"Mostly gravel underneath, to judge by the pit," Caleb answered. "Thanks for the tip. Have a cigar?"

The man took it wolfishly and bit off the end.

Caleb gave him a match.

"I thought that perhaps you owned the gravel pit."

"Me. I don't own nothin'. 'Cept this cough, and I'm willin' to get shet of that. Mine's a charity job. It's good gravel an' the hill makes it handy to git at. I can't work at my trade no longer. It takes it out of me, you see."

Caleb didn't see. The glitter in the man's eyes was not so much that of fever as of the spirit, he decided. He fancied him a little demented, by way of being a crank or a fanatic.

"I'm glad the land's worth something," he said. "It doesn't look like it." The man shot over a quick, burning look.

"That's to them as looks only on the surface," he said.

"What do you mean?"

The man led the way into the shack. From the two-by-fours that supported the corrugated iron roof hung some switches of freshly cut willow and hazel. Some were old and dried. And all were forked.

"Know what those are?" asked the man. "Them's divinin' rods. I'm a diviner. A Water-Finder. That's my trade. It's the power within me that goes out an' leaves me weak. Too weak to work at it. Each job means another nail in the lid of my coffin. Mebbe you're one of them that laugh at it?" he demanded fiercely. "But there's many in the upper valley as has blessed me when I showed 'em where to bore."

The thing seemed uncanny. Yet, somehow, it fitted in. The hunch stirred in his brain. To Caleb, under the spell of his vision, it seemed predestined that he, the Water-Bearer, should meet this Water-Finder to confirm his hope, a living signpost that he was on the track.

He knew that within the year the French Academy of Sciences had accepted the demonstration of a number of scientifically controlled cases where the "water-divining rod" had proved beyond a doubt that certain persons were gifted with the power to discover subterranean springs and reservoirs. Scientists did not attempt to explain the mystery, but accepted the phenomenon and were making it the subject of expert research to discover the natural causes.

"I have known many cases back in the East, where I come from," Caleb said, "where water has been found by the use of the rod."

The man was instantly mollified.

"Ah," he said. "It's all true. I ain't quite human, mebbe. It's a gift, the power. Like a medium's. Supernatural. The spirits talk to me about it sometimes. I'd like to show ye, but I'm too weak. But you can take my word for it—me, David Evans, the Welsh Water-Finder, what's discovered a score of wells north of Coyote crick; that there's water all under here—under this gravel.

Apparently this David Evans is to play an important part in the story. What does he do?

Man Ever Waging Fight on Disease

Happy legends to the contrary, there seems no reason to believe that the world ever has known a golden age of health. Geologists find diseased bones which are thought to show that even great prehistoric lizards, and after them the early mammals, suffered from tumors which, according to the advertisers, will claim the teeth of four out of five of us. Man probably falls heir to troubles which other flesh suffered before him.

By herding in crowds, by giving up his dower rights of sunlight and space, he even has added to many of those troubles, has created wholly new ways of wracking body and mind. For a time the balance of life and death promised doom to cities: they survived only because life was produced abundantly and cheaply without their walls, and the best and most adventurous were fed into them. The slow process of observation and control which has made it safer now to live in a big city than in a village (and often safer to live in a city than in the open country itself), is the science of public health.—Survey Graphic.

Went Him One Better

A cobbler in a university town, wishing to meet the clever advertising of an encroaching and unscrupulous rival, asked one of the professors to give him a Latin phrase that he could place in the window and attract the attention of the students. The professor promptly wrote the words "Mens Conscia Recti" (a clear conscience). The shoemaker had the sign painted and with much pride hung it in a conspicuous position in his window. Imagine his discomfiture when he saw on a gaudy sign in his rival's window, the following day, the words "Men's and Women's Conscia Recti."

Railway Gauge Varies

The standard gauge of railways is 4 feet 8½ inches in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, a number of countries on the continent of Europe, etc., it being the gauge which prevails on probably three-fourths of the railways of the globe. There have been various different gauges, and in fact a number thereof are in use at the present day. The old broad gauge was 7 feet. There are narrow-gauge lines of 3 feet. In Ireland the usual gauge is 5 feet 3 inches; in France there are lines of 4 feet 9 inches; in Spain and Portugal the normal gauge is 5 feet 5¾ inches; in Russia, 5 feet; in India, the prevailing gauge is 5 feet 6 inches; in the British colonies, 3 feet 6 inches; in South America, 5 feet 6 inches, with various others.

Clair de Lune

A new gob was sent aloft one night with strict orders to report all lights—all lights, it was emphasized. As soon as he hit the crow's nest he sang out:

"Light ho', sir. Two points off the starboard bow."

The officer screwed the glass in his eye and scanned the horizon. Not being able to raise anything, he asked:

"Can you make her out?"

"Yes, sir."

"Report her."

"She's the moon, sir."—American Legion Weekly.

Bricks Lasted Long

Six bricks, said to be nearly 300 years old, were removed from the debris of a building being torn down in Albany, N. Y., recently. Cuyler Reynolds, Albany historian, carried them to the mayor's office, and declared them to be the oldest in the United States. He said that when the building was reconstructed more than fifty years ago, the same bricks were used, and that this had been the custom when the structure was rebuilt on several previous occasions. Mr. Reynolds intends to send the bricks to various historical societies.

If you do you are a judicious advertiser and a good business man. Judicious advertising Always Pays and especially when you advertise in a paper that is read by everybody in its territory.

This newspaper reaches the eye of every who might be a possible buyer in this section.

Most temperamental of all farm animals is Madame Dairy Cow, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. She who is considered by most persons as the personification of calm and the living contradiction of nervousness is really the fussiest, and much thought, work and study on the part of the dairyman are devoted to the pampering of her whims.

"Experienced cow owners know that it is no libel of the lady of the dairy barn to call her fussy," according to the Institute, "but the extent to which she is governed by her temperament is really amazing. The slightest variation from the daily routine inevitably results in a lowered milk production. A change in the stall, or feed, unusual noises, a sharp change in the weather—Madame Dairy Cow misses none of these. She is sure to show it in the weight of her milk for the day, or, perhaps, several days after she has been particularly upset by something.

"Madame Dairy Cow is especially sensitive to changes in feed and the loss of many a well deserved dollar of the cow owner may be traced to it. This does not mean a change from one brand of feed to another but rather to the invisible and unsuspected changes such as the substitution of cotton-seed meal of a certain protein content for one slightly higher; musty bran for bran that is sweet; linseed meal having a low fat content for a high one, etc. Such changes affect the feeding value of a ration and Madame Dairy Cow spots them all. She is fussy about the flavor of her ration, and does not care who knows it. There is just one thing she craves and that is uniformity. She approves of it and demands that her ration have exactly the same feeding value, the same flavor, day in and day out; month in and month out, if she is to give the maximum production which that particular ration will permit. This is a real problem for those who mix their own rations and the manufacturer of dairy feed is no less a victim of these variations. Only one feed manufacturing concern, so far as is known, has, by means of an ingenious device, solved this problem. Through a system of storage blending and tank blending on a large scale, this organization is producing a composite of many different lots of the same ingredients in their feeds that is giving them a mixture as perfectly uniform as it is humanly possible to make it. Such uniformity in feed affords Madame Dairy Cow the least possible excuse to display her fussiness."

Who Was Swedenborg?

Emanuel Swedenborg, the son of a bishop, was the great Swedish scientist, philosopher and theologian, whose vast range caused Emerson to term him the mastodon of scholars. Dr. Parkes Cadman recently named him the Universal Genius.

Officially connected, by appointment of the King, with the great mining industry of Sweden, he mastered all the sciences of his time, and wrote the most useful books on metallurgy, minerals, geology, astronomy, and the human brain.

His life search was for the human soul. How his spiritual senses were opened, after he was 50 years of age, that he might reveal the human soul, the life after death, and the Bible itself, may be read in the above named, uplifting, useful books.

The "Tourist Bible Class of Miami, Florida"—four thousand persons present from every state and city, adopted the following resolutions offered by the President of a New Jersey National Bank, the lesson topic being:

"THE UNJUST JUDGE

"Whereas: Crime is on the increase throughout our country, and whereas the regularly constituted authorities for the enforcement of laws have failed to so enforce the laws, to deterring criminal and preventing crime; and whereas it appears that the court officers are not alert detecting and arresting the lawless, and whereas when faithful jurors convict, undue leniency of the courts, (by imposing only small fines) seems to encourage instead of discourage lawlessness; which fines are cheerfully paid by offenders, and in some cases regarded as a license.

"And whereas: People in the towns of Bastrop, La.; Harrison, Ark.; Bronson, Fla., and Herrin, Ill., and other sections of our country, dissatisfied with the work of the courts, have taken the law into their own hands;

"Therefore be it resolved:

"1—That we urge all court officers to call a convention, to devise, and make new plans for carrying out the intention of constituted authorities for law enforcement.

"2—That we hear that the increase of crime and criminals, is largely due to inadequate punishment, meted out to those convicted. The courts are urged to reform by rendering justice to their one client—society, and thus put a stop to the crime wave, ever increasing throughout the country."

Apple Crop Menaced By Return Of Maggot

The apple maggot is back again. Adult flies of this year's brood emerged in Ingham County on July 15, and word is being sent out from the M. S. C. that now is the time to make spray applications for control of this fruit pest.

The damage from apple maggot is done by the burrowing of the larvae in the flesh of the apple. Fruit infested with the maggot drops from the tree; the maggot gets into the soil and passes the winter in the resting stage. During June and July, the fly comes out ready to lay eggs in the apples This is the time to apply the spray.

All apples, except early varieties which are too near picking time. should be sprayed immediately with a spray made up of one and one-half pounds of dry powdered lead arsenate to 50 gallons of water. Orchards in northern Michigan may be sprayed a little later. Stock which will eat the infested apples which fall from the trees should be run in the orchards, or the fallen apples picked up daily and fed to stock.

Professor R. H. Pettit, M. S. C. states that these control measures will successfully combat this pest which has reappeared in numbers after an absence of twenty-five years. The larvae of the apple maggot may be easily distinguished from that of the common codling moth. The codling moth larvae has six legs and a distinct brownish colored head. The larvae of the apple maggot has no legs and no distinct head.

Quack Grass Named With Worst Weeds

Quack grass is rated one of Michigan's worst weed pests by crops men at the state college. The mere appearance of small patches on uninfested farms brings alarm to those who know its habits of growth.

While there is no easy way to handle this tenacious pest, there are effective methods of control which can be followed out successfully. The following outline for quack grass control is given by Prof J. F. Cox, farm crops department at the college.

"Quack grass can be controlled, on a field scale, only by effective plowing and cultivation at the right time. If quack grass is in sod form or well distributed over your fields, it would be advisable to plow in late July or early August to a shallow depth three or four inches, or barely turning sod. The field should then be disced and cross-disced with discs set almost straight so as to cut sod into pieces After drying, the quack grass (sod and roots) should be raked together and burned.

"Every ten days or two weeks the field should be harrowed with spring tooth harrow, or disced after rains which cake the surface. The next spring the field should be plowed as early as possible to depth of seven to nine inches and planted to cultivated crop such as corn or beans. The cultivated crop should be given thorough cultivation and gone over with sharp hoes to get quack grass wherever it is in the rows."

The Supernatural and Surgery

It has been announced by some scientists who have investigated and think they know, that amputated parts of the human body manifest some connection with the main trunk after the parts have been interred. The said scientists maintained this was true from evidence given in by the persons who had suffered amputations. These particularly reported they had experienced great pain in the missing parts at times, for which there was no help, and in one case we remember that one complained of pinching, galding pains in an amputated right leg for three years after the operation, and upon being questioned he claimed to believe the buried member was crowded in its box, and continued to put up the complaint until the leg was disinterred and straightened in its coffin, after which no more pain was felt by its former owner.

These stories have been hashed and re-hashed but the bare fact remains there is no such connection super-natural or otherwise, after a limb has been cut off. It is not as the legs of a crab—having vitality within itself, to grow on again, nor is the human body capable of adding another limb.

During recent investigations in Eastern Hospitals where patients have suffered amputations, it has been found that the ends of the nerves and veins in the stump carry the same impressions as they did when the limb was in place, hence a nervous individual is led to believe the arm is still intact, although his or her vision gives it the lie. This was tested out by blindfolding a patient who had been operated on before he came out of the anæsthesia. Hence it will also serve to illustrate how persons subject to hallucinations or otherwise mentally disturbed, sometimes actually think their missing limbs are with them, or in some way capable of receiving and transmitting pain to the brain. In cases where this claim was put up, it was found the patient was "dippy" and had no real sensibility of his or her physical condition.

"Cow Capacity" Key to Success

"Cow Capacity" is what causes a cow getting ten pounds of grain a day to produce 35 pounds of milk, and another cow, under the same conditions and on exactly the same kind and amount of feed, to give only 20 pounds of milk, says the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics.

"Producing milk is not much different than producing shoes or any other commodity except that we have to deal with a living animal with a milk-producing ability that is more or less inherited," according to the Institute. "One shoemaker can turn out a pair of shoes to sell at five dollars while another cannot afford to sell them for less than seven dollars. There is a big difference in the production costs. Similar differences hold true in dairying. The breed of the animals, their feed, the quality of the animals, and their management, all have their effect on the cost of their milk production. A good dairyman may be able to produce milk at a price that would financially cripple another dairyman.

"Feed is the largest single item in milk production. It takes about the same amount of feed to keep a high producing dairy cow alive as it does to maintain a cow of limited production. A cow cannot turn out nutrients in the form of milk which she does not receive in her feed, and the big difference in the production of milk from individual cows lies in the kind of feed they are fed and the amount they are able to consume and convert into milk. A heavy producing cow can utilize a large amount of feed, while the small producer wastes it. It is this cow capacity that makes the large producer a more economical producer than the low producer.

"Many dairymen are misled by a false economy into buying 'cheap' feed for their herds," according to the Institute. "In most instances the cheap feed is not really worth as much at its price as another feed at a higher price. A group of cows on feed selling at $54 a ton, averaged 81 cents worth of grain for every 100 pounds of milk produced. A similar herd on $52 feed averaged 87 cents of feed for each hundred pounds of milk. This means that on the basis of milk produced on the higher priced feed, the $52 feed was really worth only $48.40 a ton, or $3.60 less than the price asked for it."

The giant arena in the centre of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition site in Philadelphia was built in approximately 300 working days It was completed and in use a month before the opening of the big exposition which celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. This photograph, made from the air, shows nearly 3,000 boys on the playing field, massed there for the dedicatory exercises on May 1 which formally opened the structure. In the stands are seated 10,000 persons watching the program. A group of 10,000 persons is a large crowd but they are only a "drop in the bucket" in the big Philadelphia stadium. The boys paraded onto the field to the accompaniment of fourteen bands and there went through their drills and athletic exercises for the benefit of city officials and parents.

Why I'm going to the Greater MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

By Cousin Joe

WHEN YOUTH FLAMED HIGH

Last Sunday when we were all over to my wife's cousin Cherry Whipple's for dinner, I got bantering with Cherry about our romancing together in the old days before we both got married (to somebody else) and Cherry said: "Joe, seems to me you're looking kind of old this year!" "That so," I snorts, "tell you what I'll do, Cherry, I'll take you to the State Fair in September and show you the best time of your young life. Midway, horse show, auto races and we'll have a bottle of pop all by ourselves." Course I wasn't very serious about it, but just then my wife comes up. "What's this—what's this, taking Cherry to the Fair?" "I accept," cuts in Cherry. "Joe invited me." Now I've got to take 'em both!

FISH AND GAME EXHIBITS WILL FEATURE STATE FAIR

The State Department of Conservation will have a large exhibit at the Michigan State Fair to be held at the State Fair Grounds in Detroit from September 5 to September 11.

This exhibit will be housed in the Poultry Building and in an adjacent building, and will be well worth the attention and study of every visitor at the State Fair.

A big fish exhibit is to be placed in the Poultry Building, and officials of the State Department of Conservation have promised that they will make an effort to have every species of fish to be found in Michigan waters on exhibition.

Additional exhibits of wild game of all sorts, feathered and fur-bearing, will be a feature in this department.

Since the World War I have tried to assist farmers who borrowed and gave until it hurt and were later betrayed by the reactionary Congress elected in 1918 (through methods well illustrated by he Newberry election in Michigan the same year). That Congress repudiated the promises the farmers when they bought liberty bonds, namely that their requirements for credit would be taken care of if they were patriotic and supported the Government in its hour of need.

The statement made that our elastic Federal Reserve System had been stretched to the extent of its elasticity, was thoroughly refuted by figures from the Comptroller of the Currency

Yet by resolution Congress compelled banks, (borrowing through the Federal Reserve System) to call loans to farmers amounting to more than $10,000,000,000.00. As a result one-third of the farmers in the United States lost their farms, while the "greatest washings" in history were made by bank officers who availed themselves of advance information for speculative purposes.

I have a list of farms in this Congressional District, which can be purchased now for less than the Insurance on the buildings alone. I have helped many farmers who lost their farms to take advantage of the present low price of farm lands and the gradually davancing of farm products, to repurchase land and get a new start. The interest paid is 5% and the loans may run a lifetime if the interest is paid promptly, or may be paid as desired on interest dates. The expense of getting the loans can hardly be added to interest, as our inspectors carry to the farmer profitable money making information in farming methods, and the correction of the abstract under expert supervision is of inestimable benefit. Old settlers in a community can usually be found to explain broken links of title, which will save the farmers from losing a good sale, as frequently happens from faulty abstract.

Can it be possible that the laboring man and farmer in debt, working 16 hours to pay for a bare existance, will vote to return a Congressman who voted to take the burden of the war debt from the rich and place it upon the shoulders of the poor?

Will the farmer vote to continue a system of robbery, which is centralizing wealth rapidly into the control of the few, by sending to Congress the hired men of the trusts?

Not all wealthy men contributed to the immence slush funds used in the last campaign, in a thousand different channels to debauch and misinform the public, but too many were silent when their voices should have been raised, because selfish interests were involved. No man is a Christian who stays out of politics because it hurts his business. The unpardonable sin is not unbelief but disobedience to the still small voice that speaks positively as to what our part shall be in making "Thy Kingdom Come".

In 1924 when Senator Wheeler was leading the inquiry into the U. S. Department of Justice which forced the retirement of Harry Daugherty from his high place as Attorney General, suddenly when Daugherty was about to fall a U. S. grand jury returned an indictment in Montana, charging Senator Wheeler with having appeared before the Department of Interior in violation of a federal statute. Senator Wheeler at once went on the floor of the Senate, vigorously denying the charges and demanded immediate investigation that he might prove his innocence and demonstrate that the indictment was a vicious attempt to obstruct justice by interfering with the Daugherty investigation at its most critical stage. A Senate investigating committee composed of five members elected by the Senate of which Senator Borah was chairman, after a thorough and impartial review of all the evidence, brought in a report signed by four senators, which wholly exonerated Senator Wheeler from the charges and stated that at all times he had observed not only the letter but the spirit of the law. The Senate almost unanimously endorsed the report of the committee, there being only five dissenting votes.

Senator Wheeler also pressed the Department of Justice for speedy trial. Presumably for political ends, the administration kept the charges hanging over him until April, 1925. When finally the case came to trial in Montana, the government relied on a surprise witness whose manifestly perjured testimony was repudiated by the jury which promptly vindicated Senator Wheeler by an immediate acquital.

In the meantime, the Department of Justice, perhaps fearing this outcome in Montana, determined to "get" Senator Wheeler, to blacken his character and destroy his usefulness if it could be done, and brought a second indictment in Washington, D. C., against Senator Wheeler on practically the same charges refuted by the Senate Committee. For as much as a year after the Montana jury had declared Senator Wheeler innocent of the charges, this indictment in the District of Columbia was left hanging oven Senator Wheeler to harass his family and friends. When the case was finally reached and decided by the District judge in Senator Wheeler's favor, the Department of Justice did not dismiss it, but allowed the time for appeal to expire.

If our readers wish further enlightenment on the character and conduct of Harry Daugherty as political boss and public official, we suggest reading the articles which have recently appeared in the New Republic by the eminent publicist, Bruce Bliven, on the "Ohio Gang."—Editor's Note.

Harry Daugherty is, and has been for many years, a mere pawn with which corrupt business has played its game upon the political chessboard of America. He is the natural result of a system that grants special privileges to the manufacturing interests, waterpower interests, railroads, public utilities and other combinations of wealth. It is seldom, however, that one of his exact type ever reaches the high position of Attorney General of the United States. Those who dominate the political parties are generally more careful in selecting cabinet officers, more anxious to have someone who at least doesn't openly consort with the denizens of the underworld. They generally want someone who bears a good reputation for sobriety and church going and whose known record is not that of a lobbyist.

When the American people turned from the Wilson Administration because they feared its foreign policy would entangle them in the meshes of European politics and intrigue Harry Daugherty and the Ohio gang were not only able to nominate but to elect Warren Harding president of the United States by the greatest majority ever given to any former candidate for the presidency.

Daugherty Makes the Deal

The Story of the Convention in Chicago has been partially told many times and I shall not burden by readers with a repitition of the details. Suffice it to say that after the convention had been sufficiently worn out and a deadlock had ensued between the forces of General Wood, Lowden and others, a secret meeting was held in one of the hotels in that great city, and in the wee small hours of the morning a few men, the bosses if you please, of the Republican Party, gathered around a table and after exacting certain promises from Daugherty, as the spokesman for Mr. Harding they agreed that Mr. Harding should be nominated as the candidate of that so-called Grand Old Party—the party that the politicians on the eve of election like to refer to as the party of Abraham Lincoln. The next day the delegates assembled there from all over the country and ratified the agreement made by the political bosses.

Boss of the "Ohio Gang"

This was the lineup at Marion, Ohio, before the election. After the election and the inauguration on March 4, 1921, came the reward merit. Harry Daugherty, the boss of the 'Ohio Gang,' was appointed Attorney General and his friend, William J. Burns, was placed in charge of the Secret Service of the United States of America with unlimited funds at his disposal. Christian was made Secretary to the President while Jess Smith was called to Washington and, altho Smith's name did not appear on the government payroll, he associated constantly with Daugherty, traveled with him, lived with him, ate with him, drank with him, had an office in the Department of Justice, had a stenographer at his own command, dictated the policy of the Department, and hired and discharged employes.

We find Howard Mannington getting as his reward an opportunity to sell unlawful indulgences, distributing patronage, selling whiskey permits to various and sundry bootleggers throughout the United States. One Kraffmiller testified that his first business transaction with Mannington was securing a wholesale liquor permit for the General Drug Company of Chicago. For this permit the General Drug Company paid his $20,000, one-third of which he kept, paying two-thirds over to Mannington.

Mannington, it must be borne in mind, was not a lawyer and could not claim this as a fee for professional services. He was simply selling his influence with Mr. Daugherty and the Republican Administration, to people who wanted whiskey permits in violation of the law of the land.

Selling Permits Unlawful

The little Green House on K Street became the rendezvous for bootleggers and those seeking public office at the hands of the Republican Administration.

Kraffmiller, whose testimony was uncontradicted, also testified that at one time he paid Mannington $25,000 for manufacturing and wholesale liquor permits for J. B. Sure & Co., and he further testified that at one other time, he paid Mannington sums ranging from $7,500 to $10,000 for favors.

But Mannington was dealing only with the small fry. We find Jess Smith, the bedfellow of the Attorney General, illicitly receiving $100,000 in the shape of 100 one-thousand dollar bills.

While the news stories that went out from Washington during the investigation naturally dealt largely with the corruption in connection with liquor permits and criminal cases, Mr. Daugherty's failure to prosecute the civil rights of the government in the Bosch Magneto case, the old Hickory Powder case, the Wright-Martin Air-craft matter, and the so-called Philippine Island Alien Property Custodian frauds, and innumerable war fraud transactions, the utter disregard of violations of the Sherman anti-trust law and the Clayton Act which was procurred by the employes of the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice, constitute an equally black page.

These are only a few of the many questionable acts and practices of the Department of Justice.

Associated with Daugherty in the pre-convention campaign were Jess Smith. Howard Mannington and others who later became prominent in the graft scandals of the last Republican Administration.

Mannington during the campaign established his headquarters in the home of Mr. Christian, whose son later became secretary to the President. Among others who took an active part in this memorable campaign were Charles Forbes, who was subsequently made head of the Veterans' Bureau and who systematically robbed the funds entrusted to him for the care of the insane and crippled soldiers.

Large Deposits Are Found

In the few short hours that the committee's investigator was permitted to remain in the Midland National Bank, the bank of Harry Daugherty's brother, he was able to uncover large sums of money held on certificate of deposit in the name of Harry Daugherty and Jess Smith, all acquired on a salary of $12,000 per annum, and when, as the undisputed testimony shows, he was living here with Jess Smith at a cost of $50,000 per year.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Senate Investigating Committee uncovered evidence which disclosed fraud and corruption on the part of the Alien Property Custodian and the Attorney General's office, nothing was done for several years by the Department. Instead they spent their time, money and apparently all the energy of which tombstone of a dead President? You are at liberty to draw your own conclusion from these facts.

Farm Day Program Details Announced

Details of the program for the annual summer Farmers Day, to be held at M. S. C. on Friday, July 30, have been announced this week at the college.

John A. Doelle, former commissioner of the state department of agriculture and at present executive secretary of the Michigan real estate association, will deliver the main address at the afternoon meeting, taking the general subject of "Michigan" for his theme.

Other speakers on this program will include Hon. L. Whitney Watkins, present state commissioner of agriculture. Band concerts, a special horse pulling contest, and a singing contest are other features listed for the afternoon program, which will be under the campus trees.

Inspection of the college livestock, buildings and experimental plots will occupy the visitors during the morning, with the usual basket picnic lunch at noon.

Dad is again being urged to "bring the family" for Farmers Day, the picnic feature being one of the most interesting phases of this great meeting.

More than 300 club members from 34 Michigan counties were enrolled last week at the state Boys and Girls Club camp, held on the campus of the M. S. C. This enrollment set a record for the annual state Club Week. The club members were entertained during the week at banquets given by the Michigan State Farm Bureau and by the State Board of Agriculture. State Board of Agriculture scholarships to be used in attendance at the State College were given to boys and girls from Iosco, Menominee, Washtenaw, Huron, Genesee, Oakland, and Tuscola counties. Club weeks for sectional gatherings will be held during July and August at Sparta Gaylord, and Chatham.

One Thresher For 36 Farms In State

A harvest of approximately 75,000,000 bushels of small grains will be Michigan's contribution to the nation's store of agricultural products this year, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. An average of one thresher for every 36 farms in the state will be used in making this vast amount of small grain available for shipment and use.

"The hum of the thresher at work in our wheat fields should serve to remind each and every one of us of the enormous expense involved in gathering in the 182 pounds of bread that each of us consumes each year," says Samuel R. Guard, director of the Foundation. "We cannot eat our bread without counting the cost. This is the time that the thresherman has to be paid."

Iowa leads all states in the number of threshing outfits with 13,464, while Rhode Island stands at the bottom of the ladder with but 8, according to the Foundation. In North Dakota every seventh farmer has a machine, while in Florida there is a single outfit for every 1,909 farmers. Minnesota tops the list of states in the total grain threshed, with Iowa a close second Where North Dakota farmers thresh on an average 3,224 bushels per farmer, Florida farmers thresh only 3 bushels per farmer.

The 140,000 threshing outfits in the United States represent an investment of half a billion dollars. The average carrying charge on these outfits is $560 a year. Each of these outfits last year threshed $13,853 worth of small grain or a total for all the outfits, of nearly two billion dollars worth of grain. The payroll for the men running these outfits, averaging three to a machine, is nearly fifty million dollars. The average outfit runs approximately three weeks in the year.

Conveution Of Music Merchants

Several hundred dealers from all parts of Michigan are planning to attend the second annual convention of the Michigan Music Merchants' association to be held in Detroit, August 16-19 at the Book-Cadillac Hotel. In addition to those coming from the state, special delegations will attend from Cleveland, Chicago and New York according to Frank J. Bayley of Detroit, president of the association and head of the Detroit Music Trades association which will act as host to the visitors.

Elaborate entertainment plans are being made and among the features will be a public street dance on Washington Boulevard which will be roped off from traffic between Michigan and Grand River Avenues. An amplifying apparatus furnished by a phonograph manufacturer, will be used to send music over the heads of thousands expected to attend. The amplifier will send a voice five miles, it is claimed.

Radio Telephone

Commander Donald B. McMillan, on board the Artic exploration schooner "Bowdoin" now off the coast of Labrador on its way north was apprised of the latest development in the field of radio science last night when through station WJAZ, Chicago, Ill. An official New York Central report, dealing with the successful use of radio telephone communication between the engine and caboose of mile-long freight trains was sent to him. The Commander's short wave set on the "Bowdoin" then relayed the report to Paris.

For some time railroads, through the Telephone and Telegraph Section of the American Railroad Association have been seeking some form of simple radio set requiring no technical knowledge to operate that would keep the conductor of a long freight train in constant touch with the engineer. A number of radio concerns have been experimenting to this end and the Zenith Radio Corporation of Chicago has developed what it believes to be the most efficient thus far produced.

On July 7 and 8, in Chicago, members of the Association thoroughly tested the apparatus installed on a New York Central freight train between Chicago and Elkhart. It was uuanimously approved. E. C. Keenan, General Superintendent Telegraph and Telephone for the New York Central filed a report to T. W. Evans, Assistant Vice President of that road, who is at present in Paris. This was relayed by members of the Amateur Radio Relay League to Mr. Evans from Chicago.

To check back, the report was again transmitted, this time by radiophone through station WJAZ to the Arctic and thence to Paris by the "Bowdoin's" set. The text of this report follows:

"Radio telephone operation between head and rear of long freight train operating between Chicago and Elkhart July 8 successful and clearly demonstrated practicability Train consisted of 116 cars, 4350 tons. Left Englewood 9:28 a. m. arrived Elkhart 2:00 p. m. Train made only two stops and was very smoothly handled without bumps or jars which operation was very favorably commented upon by thirty representatives other railroads and ten representatives press General Superintendent Riefel, Division Superintendent Lloyd and other railroad officials enthusiastic regarding development. They feel confident will greatly aid transportation. Party in caboose talked almost constantly with radio operator on engine. Freight conductor and freight engineer talked to each other and did some actual business by radio regarding handling of train. Thanks for your co-operation which made possible this wonderful demonstration. Hope you and family are having a fine trip and will be glad to see you upon return.

This result is not only a full compliance with orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but is the outcome of investigation and experiments made by the New York Central for more than twenty years, and marks what is hoped to be a long step forward in assuring the safety of trains in operation under conditions as they exist today."

Gives Suggestions For Summer Care Of Cattle

It is the most comfortable cow that produces the most milk in summer, states the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Instead of turning his cows into the field to swat flies and loaf in the shade, the dairyman will find that he can get more milk from them by feeding them on grain in the cool of the barn during the heat of the day and then turning them out at night to graze.

Following are some hints to the dairyman on the summer care of his cattle, as given by the Institute

1. Cows need lots of water. Keep it always available in a quantity they want.
2. Provide shade during hot weather, preferably in your stable in the heat of the day.
3. Let your cows graze at night when it is cool, but be sure that they can get water.
4. Screen your stable if you can, to keep out flies.
5. Spray your cows in summer with a good fly preventative.
6. Be sure they are free from lice and other vermin.
7. Remember, a cow must be comfortable and well if she is to produce milk up to her capacity. Such care requires little effort but it pays big dividends.

The Dairy Cow

The day when nearly every family possessed a cow has passed. In those earlier years, when there was plenty of pasture on the village green and along the quiet highways, it was an economical saving to the household to have their own supply of milk and butter. There were no creameries in those days and the supply from the farm was generally uncertain, but with the coming of the creamery and the elimination of grazing areas, the problem of supplying dairy products was given over to the farmer. He made that one of his problems along with many other things and naturally we have a certain amount of responsibility in his success.

Every business man, every professional man, every working man owes it to himself and to his community to do all in his power to promote dairying and diversified farming. He has no more important task, for the prosperity of the farmer is inextricably interwoven with the prosperity of the city resident. The combined efforts of the farmer and city resident make a prosperous community. for each has his allotted share in the world's work, There must be a prosperous farm population if a community is to succeed.

Unclothing The Baby

The Thermometer registered 98 in the shade. In the dingy depot waited a crowd of tired children and their more tired mothers. Flies crawled everywhere, on the floor, over the half rotten banana peels that dangled from the edge of the waste basket, on the faces and hands of children and babies. Grimy hands brushed them off and left traces of grime where they brushed.

High above the murmur of voices and noises of the nearby street rose the shrill wail of a baby. Loudly and yet more loudly it wailed, stopping only now and then to catch a gasping breath and go on.

Its half—frantic mother paced the floor; her pace increased as the baby's wails increased. She jounced and jiggled it in her arms in time to her own hurried pacing. Now and again she drew its white woolen coat more closely about it.

Poor Baby! Ninety-eight in the shade, and the baby's face all broken out with prickly heat. Presumably its body was broken out the same only, in order to determine that, it would have been necessary to remove layer upon layer of wrappings—white woolen coat, close silk bonnet, lined at that, wool booties and woolen stockings, two white flannel petticoats, a woolen shirt and woolen band and a vast quantity of diaper.

But with all the jouncing and bouncing and walking the floor the baby refused to be quieted. So the mother offered food. Over and over again the nipple, an interesting article of unscientific shape and subject to frequent investigation by flies, was put into baby's mouth. But the baby did not want it. Baby did not want food. He wanted water and lots of it, but more than anything else in the world, he wanted unclothing.

It was several summers ago that this incident occurred, summers during which mothers, many of them, have learned a lot more than mothers used to know about unclothing their babies.

Babies by the thousand today, wholly unclothed save for vest and diaper, kick delighted bare toes, wave ecstatic bare arms, and gurgle blissful "Ah-goos" even though the thermometer does register 98 in the shade.

Michigan State Holiness meeting will occur at Eaton Rapids Camp Grounds as usual this season July 23 to August 1st, 1926. All laymen are invited to this meeting and the grounds are equipped to take care of a large gathering during the session. The high lights who are scheduled to speak during the week are Rev. Joseph Smith of Redlands, California, Rev. Guy Wilson of Brookline, Massachusetts; Rev. Raymond Browning of Hendersonville North Carolina one of the most famous evangelists in America; Rev. W. G. Nixon, Detroit Mich. all wonderful speakers. This well known camp ground is controlled by the Methodists and is a pleasant place to go. The roads are ideal and you can drive up there very handily.

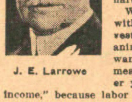
"Tramp" Cows Cost Farmers More Than Billion a Year

Huge Drain on Agriculture Can Be Offset By Better Methods, Says Institute Founder

By L. J. BROSEMER

Two groups of farms represent an average business investment of $23,000 per farm. One group showed a yearly labor income of $1,428. The other group cleared only $95 labor income for twelve months' hard work.



J. E. Larrowe

What all of us with money invested in land, animals and crops want in goodly measure, year after year, is "labor income," because labor income represents the amount of earnings left for one year's work after all expenses and interest at 5% on our investment have been taken into account. If we can't make money, why farm at all?

Quite a big difference between $1,428 and $95 as the result of a whole year's work! At least that is how it struck me, listening to James E. Larrowe outline the three factors which are keeping down profits in America's greatest industry. These are the waste, not the cost, of feed, the low production per animal, and the waste of time because of poor management.

Or, looking at the same picture from a slightly different angle, it is costing our farmers $1,200,000,000 a year in feed, labor and overhead expense to keep the 12,000,000 tramp cows that produce less than the U. S. average milk production per cow. And none of these tremendous losses will be stopped until American farms are put on a business basis.

Good Management Made All the Difference in the Income of These Two Groups of Farmers.

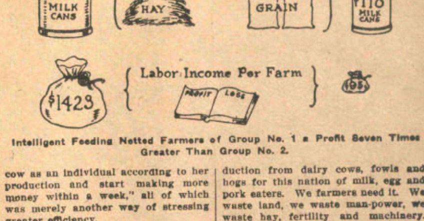
That is the opinion of James E. Larrowe, a successful business man whose clearly defined ideas on farming are the result of facts. proven on his noted Larro Research Farm and coupled with government and state field data covering thousands of eastern and southern farms.

We talked together in his office, visited his research farms, questioned the nutrition experts, former college professors, fact and detail hunters in his recently organized Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics, and I was amazed to learn how closely interwoven the businesses of milk, egg and meat production were with the general business structure of the nation, and the large part they play in our national economic life.

I wanted to get into the data, reports and charts used by the Institute workers, so I started at the beginning with a simple question. "Suppose," I asked, "a farmer is making a living milking cows, producing a few eggs, feeding a few hogs and growing crops to feed his stock. He feels his cows ought to make more profit. What can he do that will increase his profits—increase his profits right away, not next year?"

The answer I received certainly hit the nail on the head.

Answer: "You are depending on cows for a living. Milk at low cost is what you want. Very well. It takes good cows, good hay and a good grain ration to make money. You can't buy better cows, unless you have the money. You can't breed a new generation of better cows from the ones you have. That takes years. But you can, in four cases out of five, improve or change your grain ration, feed each cow as an individual according to her production and start making more money within a week," all of which was merely another way of stressing greater efficiency.



Intelligent Feeding Netted Farmers of Group No. 1 a Profit Seven Times Greater Than Group No. 2.

We had not gone very far into the subject of animal efficiency before I found myself facing facts obtained from official sources presented in two neatly arranged tables for single comparisons. The new data in these tables did more to convince me that farm profits depend upon efficient feeding than have any figures I had ever seen in this age of statistics and nation of statisticians. These data are worth a good many hundred dollars to any thinking farmer keen enough to learn the lesson they teach.

In the table are given "pictures in figures" of what resulted from a year's work on two large groups of farms. In the very first line is shown the last thing a farmer finds out—his yearly labor income. The farmers in Group 1 make $1,428 labor income. That sum is practically 15 times greater than the labor income made by the farmers in Group 2.

Average Factors	Group 1	Group 2
Labor income	$ 1,428	$ 95
Size vs. Intensity.
Capital investment	$25,654	$23,550
Acres in farm	108	137
Crop acres in farm	86	100
Number of men	1.8	1.6
Number of cows	11.5	8.9
Number of cows per man	6.4	5.6
Units of livestock	14.8	12.5
Hours of productive work	3,110	3,720
Crop acres per man	48	62
Hours of productive work per man	178	276
Per cent total crop and stock receipts from livestock	67	60
Efficiency of Production.
Value of land per acre	$ 202	$ 149
Value of cows per head	96	110
Crop index (average is 100%)	122%	89%
Pounds of butterfat per cow	249	207
Economy and Efficiency of Feeding.
Feed per unit livestock	$ 108	$ 119
Receipts per $100 fed livestock	178	101
Receipts per $100 fed dairy cattle	225	118

A study of the two columns of figures shows that there was only a small difference in the average capital invested in the two groups of farms. More intensive farming was practiced by the farmers in Group 1—they had more livestock and more cows per farmer, per acre and per man. Their enterprises made possible more hours of productive work per farm.

A further study of the figures shows that the farms in Group 1 produced more efficiently than did those in Group 2. The Group 1 farms produced larger crop yields—122% against 89%, basing 100% as an average. Group 1 farms produced more butterfat per cow—249 pounds per cow as against 207 pounds. Or, to put it in terms of milk, approximately 7,114 pounds per cow as against 5,914 pounds.

That brings us to the points of the lesson worth nailing down. These points are as follows:

(1) The intelligent, efficient feeding—good roughage plus a milk-making grain ration—practiced on Group 1 farms, returned $225 for every $100 worth of feed fed dairy cattle. (2) On the other farms only about half as much, or to be exact, only $118 was returned out of every $100 worth of feed. (3) On one group of farms the crops of 86 acres plus purchased concentrates show a yearly labor income of $1,428—primarily because more intelligent feeding resulted in receipts of $225 from ever $100 worth of roughage, farm-grown grains and purchased concentrates (4) The other group cleared only $95 labor income for 12 months' hard work, and had receipts of only $118 from every $100 worth of feed.

Little wonder the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics was founded to study the economics of efficient production from dairy cows, fowls and hogs for this nation of milk, egg and pork eaters. We farmers need it. We waste land, we waste man-power, we waste hay, fertility and machinery. But our most appalling waste is our wastage of grain through improper feeding and through our failure to use proven, tested, milk-making rations, egg-producing mashes, and economical pork-making feeds.

Cummins' Gloomy Prophecy Doesn't Disturb Coolidge —Bar Meets in Denver.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SENATOR ALBERT B. CUMMINS returned to Iowa in pessimistic mood and gave out an interview that reflected his gloomy state of mind and created something of a sensation—which, however, didn't last more than a day or so. The political upheaval in Iowa and other mid-western states presages a prolonged period of strife in the Republican party, which, if allowed to continue, will throw that party "on the rocks," especially if the Democrats maintain their solidarity, the senator believes. In his opinion the present "nominal" Republican majority in the upper house of congress may disappear with the November election.

"One doesn't know that President Coolidge will be a candidate or that he wants to be a candidate," the senator said. "My own prediction is that he will not be a candidate. I think Mr. Coolidge has been a very successful President in all but one thing, and that is his policy toward agriculture."

President Coolidge, of course, was promptly informed of Cummins' talk, but he naturally had nothing to say about it. Indeed, the correspondents at the summer White House said the Chief Executive did not seem in the least interested. He is in the habit of discounting the opinions of defeated candidates, and he has previously let it be known that he does not greatly apprehend a serious split in the ranks of his party due to the disaffection of the middle western farmers. His view is that even if the Republicans do lose control of the senate next fall, it will be due more to the prohibition issue than to the agricultural issue.

As for Mr. Coolidge's being a candidate in 1928 to succeed himself, those closest to him say no one but the President knows his intentions, and he is likely not to make up his mind until about the beginning of that year. Even if he does not intend to be a candidate, he would not admit it at this time or at a time up to the year in which the nominating convention will be held, in the opinion of Republican leaders. For, if he were to say now that he will not be a candidate, it is pointed out, his power to obtain legislation he desires from congress during the remainder of his term would disappear.

Mr. Coolidge is thoroughly enjoying his vacation in the Adirondacks, spending much of his time in fairly successful angling and in walking in the woods with Mrs. Coolidge and the dogs. Among his distinguished callers at the camp last week were Governor Smith of New York and Mrs. Smith. It was expected that Premier Meighen of Canada would soon be there to pay his respects.

IT MAY never be known exactly how many persons were killed in the terrible disaster at the naval arsenal at Lake Denmark, N. J., but the number may be thirty or more. Several days after the explosions and conflagrations began, there were soaking rains that ended the danger of further blasts and saved the army arsenal at Picatinny, near by. The loss to the navy in stores and materials is roughly estimated at $85,000,000. The army loss was about $5,000,000, and that to civilians approximately the same. Naval boards are now assessing these losses, and meantime detachments of marines are "mopping up" the ruins and searching for the remains of victims. The region was so devastated by projectiles and exploding ammunition that it looks like a patch of No Man's Land in France during the war. Several near-by villages suffered severely from shells and concussions.

IF THERE is one subject which should be of pre-eminent concern to the people of America these days, it is the breakdown of respect for law and the failure of the courts to cope with organized crime. The members of the American Bar association recognize this and made it the chief topic of discussion at their annual meeting in Denver. President Chester I. Long of Wichita, Kan., in his opening address declared that the courts are helpless and futile and that the slogan of the lawyers should be "Slow down the legislatures and speed up the courts." He pictures justice as not only blindfolded but handcuffed and put in a straitjacket by too many laws and antiquated procedure. Said he:

"The public has lost faith in the efficacy of the courts and their results in the enforcement of the criminal law. Crimes of violence have become so frequent that in several states certain classes of citizens have taken into their hands the protection of their lives and property. This is true of bankers. It is the greatest reflection on our courts."

Mayor Dever of Chicago, one of the principal speakers, advocated an unprejudiced, scientific investigation of the facts of prohibition, at the direction of congress and conducted by a commission above suspicion. He declared the liquor question is not settled and that the recent inquiry by a senate subcommittee was worthless. He said that, after six years of Volsteadism, such appalling phenomena cluster around the liquor question that it is impossible to get good government in the large cities. He said that laws to regulate ordinary human conduct were regarded by many exemplary folks as "tyrannical intrusion" on personal rights and that it was an "impossible task" to obtain respect for such laws.

The national crime commission's subcommittee on criminal procedure and judicial administration, headed by Herbert S. Hadley of St. Louis, submitted to the bar association the results of its six months of study. It holds that the law gives too much advantage to the criminal, and to correct this situation the committee recommends drastic changes in the "archaic, cumbersome and ineffective criminal procedure that now obtains in a majority of our states."

Among its recommendations, twenty in number, is one that would weaken the tenet that a man is presumed innocent until proved guilty. Another urges alteration of the unanimous jury rule so that ten men on a jury of twelve could bring about conviction in felony cases, except murder, and five on a jury of six for trial of misdemeanors.

ALL records for speed in circling the earth were smashed when Linton Wells and E. S. Evans reached the Pulitzer building in New York Wednesday afternoon just 28 days, 14 hours, 36 minutes and 51 seconds from the time when they started on their dash eastward. They used seventeen airplanes, three special trains, two liners and many small boats, automobiles, a jinricksha, a droshky and their feet—seven modes of conveyance. They met with no accidents but had many thrilling experiences, especially in flying over mountain ranges. The travelers agree that the thing that has impressed them most is the backwardness of aviation in the United States as compared with Europe. They comment, too, on the remarkably cordial reception and efficient help given them by the Russians.

DICTATORS are becoming common in the old world. Just recently two more of them—dictators at least so far as financial matters are concerned—were created. One of them, as an innovation, is a king already. Albert of Belgium was given by the chamber practically unlimited powers to try to solve the country's financial problems which are made evident in the rapidly rising cost of living and the fall of the Belgian franc. Premier Jaspar, asking the chamber for this action, scored the "citizens without consciences" for their campaign against the national currency. He continued:

"Nothing justifies the uneasiness of our population. Never have we had so few unemployed. Antwerp has recovered full activity. Our crops are bountiful and agricultural production is worthy our industrial production. The budget is balanced, thanks to economy, and no new taxes will be needed on this score. It is only for dealing with the financial problem and food supplies we ask these powers."

M. Caillaux is France's financial dictator, and he has made a good start by running over to London and signing, with Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, the definite arrangement for funding the French debt to Great Britain. The scale of yearly payments is that proposed last August. The so-called safeguard clause, which France wishes incorporated in the agreement with America, provides that if Germany defaults in its reparation payments to France, the latter country will be entitled to ask for reconsideration of the terms in the light of all circumstances then prevailing.

THIRTEEN men, including six members of the Turkish parliament, were hanged on the waterfront at Smyrna for conspiracy to assassinate President Kemal Pasha. All protested their innocence. The trial of the condemned men, who were charged with plotting the death of Kemal Pasha on his arrival at Smyrna on June 18 last, disclosed that the very existence of the new Turkish republic was threatened by the plotters.

BASTILLE day in Paris was the occasion for a great military parade with all the splendor of the days before the war. The guests of honor were Moulay Youssef, sultan of Morocco who is the protege of France, and Gen. Primo de Rivera, dictator of Spain. Communists and other liberals did not like these two autocrats and expressed their feeling by hissing, for which a lot of them were clubbed by the police and locked up. In other respects it was a big day for the people of Paris. In an interview Dictator de Rivera warmly defended his rule in Spain and declared the recent abortive rebellion did not amount to anything. Generals Weyler and Aguilera, leaders of that revolt, frankly admit their part in the plot and maintain that what they did or attempted was constitutional, since their attack was not against the king, but against the dictator who, they assert, represents neither the king nor the country.

CHICAGO entertained another great host last week—the members of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in national convention. Fully 150,000 of them, from all parts of the land, were present and they had a joyous time, besides dedicating the beautiful building which is both a memorial to the Elks who died in the war and the national headquarters of the order. Amusements of all kinds were provided, including parades, dances, competitive drills and a fine balloon race. Charles H. Grakelow of Philadelphia was elected grand exalted ruler and Cincinnati was awarded the next convention.

SIXTY-FOUR banks in Georgia and the Bankers' Trust company, the operating company for 120 banks in the state, have closed their doors, the action being due to the appointment of a receiver for the trust company. The receivership was granted on the petition of the Bank of Umatilla, Fla., which alleged the trust company had obtained $491,500 from the Umatilla bank to be placed on investment.

SAN FRANCISCO will benefit immensely from the action taken last week by fourteen of the city's wealthiest men whose combined fortunes are more than $100,000,000. Led by C. W. Merrill, W. H. Crocker, Mortimer Fleischacker, Paul Shoup and Clay Miller, these men formed a foundation under which billions of the surplus wealth of their families will be donated to the benefit of the community. Each will make specific gifts for specific purposes and a self-perpetuating board of trustees will handle the bequests after the donor's death.

JOHN W. WEEKS, former senator and secretary of war in the cabinet of Presidents Harding and Coolidge, died at Lancaster, N. H., after a long illness. He was an able and loyal citizen and an unusually competent public official.

Another man taken by death last week whose name was familiar to all was Lincoln J. Carter, writer of popular melodramas and inventor of much stage machinery.

Revolt Within Ranks of Italian Fascisti

Rome.—A current of discontent has been discovered among "extremist elements" of the Fascist party and stern measures have been adopted to curb it. The trouble is attributed to friction between local and central Fascist authorities and unwillingness of some extremist groups to accept the edicts of the centralized authority.

An example of the manner in which the government is dealing with the situation is to be found at Savona, where Amilcare Dupanloup, leader of an extremist faction, has been arrested, charged with heading a dissident movement.

Savona has been in turmoil for some time and Dupanloup's arrest followed a series of incidents in which five court workers were hurt.

The local press says the Fascist party intends to go the limit in crushing movements such as Dupanloup's, and has determined that petty squabbles must be forgotten in order that all the nation's energy may be concentrated on solving national problems.

A "psychological demobilization" of the Italian people has been ordered by Premier Mussolini as a means of convincing the world of Italy's peaceful intentions. This was revealed by a government spokesman, who explained that the premier had directed the newspapers to cease publishing incendiary material tending to keep alive "the bellicose terminology and spirit."

He was badly shaken, but an X-ray examination showed that no bones had been broken.

Ann Arbor—Economic value holds no lure to the bashful swains of Washtenaw county. So County Clerk C. L. Pray decided after his offer of free marriage licenses given during the annual gala bargain day of Ann Arbor merchants went unheeded. So enthused was Pray with the idea, he said, that he would pay for all licenses issued himself. After missing the circus acts to wait in his office for the rush of applicants, Pray retired in disgust. Not a single application had been made.

He was a Danish nobleman by birth, a respected gentleman and lover of books during leisure hours and desperado and gunman by profession. His real name was Ivan Dahl Von Teller.

They were unable to furnish $5,000 bond each when arraigned in justice court.

Lansing—Apportionment of $15,367,191 in primary school moneys to various counties at the rate of $13.25 per child has been announced by the department of public instruction. Although the rate is lower than last year when the state paid $13.70 for each person between the ages of 5 and 20 years, the amount on which $13.25 is based does not include about $800,000 deducted under an act of the 1925 legislature for assisting districts in especially impoverished circumstances.

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

By Reading Experiences of Other Women

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 206, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Stunned Fish With Clubs

Caddies at the Napoleon (Ohio) Golf club enjoyed a fish fry recently. The recent heavy rains had backed the water from the river into the creek in the golf grounds, says the Toledo Blade. With the water came an abundance of carp. Caddies armed themselves with golf clubs and drove at the carp until they were stunned and then they were taken home ready for the frying pan.

Finish of Trick Left Parrot Still Curious

A sailor, home from a voyage, went, accompanied by his parrot, to a local music hall. A conjurer came on.

"That's a good trick," said the sailor; "I wonder what he'll do next."

The conjurer did even better.

"That's a good trick,' said the sailor; "I wonder what he'll do next."

The conjurer did his masterpiece.

"That's an excellent trick," said the sailor; "I wonder what he'll do next."

As he spoke he lit his pipe and threw the match through a side door, where it ignited a pile of explosives. . . .

When the smoke had cleared away, theater, sailor, audience—all had vanished. Three miles off on a church spire, featherless and blackened, sat the parrot, saying, "That's an excellent trick! I wonder what he'll do next."

Unbreakable Ax

With head and handle of steel, forged and tempered in one piece, a handy new ax is by its very construction, unbreakable, says the Popular Science Monthly. The handle cannot work loose and come out, so there is no danger of the head's flying off. A hand-hold of leather gives a firm grip, and the hand does not come in touch with the cold steel. This steel ax is said to be lighter in weight than the usual wooden-handled ax.

Two unusual features of this sturdy ax are a hook on the head that is useful for drawing out staples, and a claw at the end of the handle for pulling nails. Its head, of course, can be used for hammering.

FAMED PLANE IN ITS FINAL REST

The famed "dawn to dusk" airplane in which Lieutenant Russell L. Maughan crossed the continent in a single day on June 23, 1924, the first time the feat was ever performed, has joined the air service's historic wreckage at Mt. Clemens.

The last flight of the speedy Curtiss PW-8 was over Selfridge field and the pilot was Lieutenant John J. Williams of the First Pursuit group. In landing after the flight, the plane was completely disabled. The wheels sank into the turf, the landing gear was wiped off, the plane nosed up and then fell over on its back. Lieutenant Williams was not injured, but the machine was beyond repair.

The plane had been in contsant service since the day of its memorable flight. It was equipped with large fuel tanks for long cruising radius, and these had just been replaced by the regular sized gasoline tank. On the first flight after this change the accident occurred.

Air corps officers at Selfridge field explained that the hard usage to which the ship had been subjected in the past was partly responsible for the failure of the landing gear struts and the resultant damage.

Lieutenant Maughan flew the ship 2,540 miles in the elapsed time of 21 hours 48½ minutes, leaving Mitchell field, New York, just before dawn and landing at the Presidio, San Francisco, as darkness covered the city. He made four stops on the journey for fuel, Dayton, Ohio, St. Joseph, Mo., Rock Springs, Wyo., and Sal Duro, Utah.

33 Heirs Claim $500

Thirty-three heirs of the estate of Mrs. Eugenie Renaud, who died July 5, leaving no will, presented themselves before Joseph Drolschagen, clerk of the Probate Court in Detroit, and asked that Mrs. Renaud's estate, which they estimate at $500, be divided among them.

Among the heirs are 13 nephews, 18 nieces and two sisters of Mrs. Renaud. This is the greatest number of heirs to any estate that has ever passed through the probate office, according to Mr. Drolschagen.

Educator Faces Trial For Shot at Blind Woman

W. H. Schofield, lAbion college graduate and teacher in the Utica high school during the last year, must stand trial on the charge of attempted murder, under the decision of Judge Neil E. Reid in the Mt. Clemens court, who denied the motion of counsel for Schofield that the proceedings be quashed.

Schofield is accused as the hired killer in an attempt on the life of Mrs. Frank Mott of Utica, when a shot was fired at her through the sitting room window. She was not injured. Frank Mott and Mrs. Lillian Nichols, Utica widow, were dismissed on a conspiracy chrage after the preliminary examination.

Birthday Charleston Breaks Aged Vet's Leg

Colonel Oscar A. Janes of Detroit, national senior vice-commander of the G. A. R., is firmly convinced that the Charleston is a much more dangerous pastime than the dances which were in vogue in the '60s.

Colonel Janes' firm conviction about the latest dance comes from practical experience, for while he was celebrating his eighty-fourth birthday he was prevailed upon to essay a few of the simpler steps of that modern seismic disturbance called the Charleston, and fell, spraining his ankle.

Manistee Expected to Buy Ancestral Filer Home at Once

Though they have until October to accept the offer of Frank Filer to sell them his ancestral home, Filer Park, for $10,000, the Manistee county supervisors probably will snap up the offer at once, members of the board said.

The estate is offered at the low figure because it would make an ideal site for a hospital and sanitarium, Filer explained. It is said to be worht at least $100,000.

Filer has rejected offers several times as large as the figure he asks the county to pay, his friends asserted. It is only Manistee's need of such an instiuttion as he suggests, and the fact that his father, the late E. G. Filer, would have approcved such a use of the property, that induced him to make the offer, he said.

The institution would probably specialize in tuberculosis treatment, in view of the congested condition among Michigan's tuberculosis institutions.

Calhoun Makes Record for Boy and Girl Club Work

Calhound County Boys and Girls club work rates well in the state, as shown by the report from the office of the state club leader.

During the past winter there were 64 counties doing clothing club work with 5351 girls enrolled with 81.1 per cent finshing their work. Of this number Calhound county had 228 girls enrolled and 80 per cent finished their work. Calhoun was the second in the state in enrollment, being beaten by Saginaw county only. These 228 girls made 608 useful garments with a value of $928.43 and at an estimated saving of $490.94.

The handicraft boys did equally as well although the report only covers the 23 counties on the south and west side of the state. For these 23 counties Calhoun was first in enrollment with 118 boys enrolled and 104 finishing or 88.1 per cent.

Detroit Senior Is Victor in Suit for Father's Fortune

Frank Deans, of Detroit, senior at the University of Michigan, won his suit for the estate of his father, the lateRobert Deans, Atlanta broker. The decision in Atlanta, Ga., of Ordinary Thomas Jeffries held that he was the sole heir of law. The estate is valued at more than $100,000.

It is expected the case will be appealed. Also there remains a previous will made by the testator at Battle Creek sanitarium, in which the entire estate was bequeathed to Miss Reba Lawrence, Atlanta beauty. It is believed, however, that the claim of Miss Lawrence will be settled out of court, provided young Deans finally wins, in event of contest.

Normal Enrollment Cut Laid to New Law

Enrollment at Northern State Normal school, Marquette, has decreased slightly with the opening of the summer terms, John Munson, its president announced. The total enrollment is 700, as compared with 950 last summer.

Munson said the new law requiring at least a year's normal work as the prerequisite for rural school teachers, instead of the old so-called limited certificate which was obtainable by six weeks' summer work, was responsible for the decrease in enrollment.

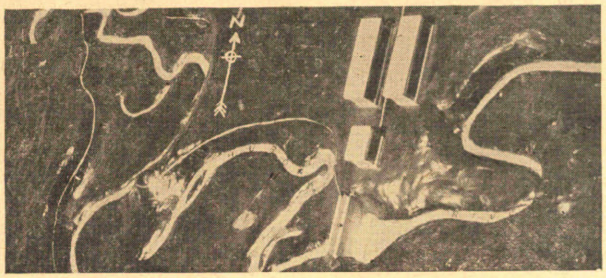
PICTURE OF DREAM BEING REALIZED



Birdseye View of Huron Basin Showing Propcsed Textile Mills and Power Dam

This is the first time this picture has ever been seen by the public, being the drawing of Henry Ford's proposed textile mills and power dam on the Huron River just east of Ypsilanti. In these mills, soon the hum of machinery will be heard, while thousands of workmen turn out yards and yards of textiles for the autombile that circles the world.

The Boston contractors, Stone & Webster, are just waiting for the railroad to the damsite to be completed in order to haul into the basin of the Huron River the carloads of cement, stone and steel that will be required in this monster development.

This picture visualizes in detail Henry Ford's plans that are being consumated after six years of acquiring land and water rights .

Cop Shoots Dog, Fined

Every dog has his day, but the last day for a Detroit dog brought a fine of $10 to the cop who fired the fatal shot into a big police dog.

Joseph Barclay, Grosse Pointe Park patrolman, was fined $10 with the option of a five-day jail sentence by Arthur E. Gordon of Detroit for cruelty to animals.

The penalty resulted from the shooting by Barclay of a police dog belonging to Edward M. Apple, attorney. Apple said Barclay shot the dog with no provocation and left the animal wounded and suffering for an hour before killing it. Barclay said the dog attacked him.

$15,367,191 State Primary School Fund Is Pro-Rated

Apportionment of $15,367,191 in primary school moneys to various counties at the rate of $13.25 per child is announced by the department of public instruction.

Although the rate is lower than last yea, when the state paid $13.70 for each person between the ages of 5 and 20 years, the amount on which $13.25 is based does not include about $800,000 deducted under an act of the 1925 legislature for assisting districts in especially impoverished circumstances.

The $800,000, reprseenting 5 per cent of the total, will be distributed to those districts with a ratio of assessed valuation to school population lower than the average. The amount such districts will receive will be regulated by the relative "poverty" of the district also. This distribution is to be announced later.

Strawberry, Cherry Crops Below Normal

The strawberry crop will be about 50 per cent less than estimated, according to officials of Shelby canning concerns. The failure is due to the unusually cold weather. Berries coming on the market are small. Crop prospects in Oceana and Mason counties are no better than in 1925.

Sweet cherries are about 70 per cent of a normal crop, but sour cherries were damaged greatly by late frosts.

Sparrow Is Hanged

Tragedy sometimes stalks the nesting periods of birds. Recently there was witnessed the hanging of a sparrow that became entangled in a piece of string it was carrying for nesting material. The string, like a hangman's noose, slipped about the bird's neck and it hanged till dead.

SKYSCAPER AGE GRIPS DETROIT

Now Detroit has gone in for skyscrapers in earnest, having taken from New York the crown for structures that soar heavenward.

Following the announcement of J. B. Book that he was going to erect the tallest building in the world, the Book Tower of 81 stories that will far overshadow the present Book Tower of 39 stories, representatives of the Eaton Estate issued the statement that they would build a 34-story tower at Woodward avenue and Grand Circus Park.

The Eaton Tower is being designed to accommodate three classes of tenants. The first five floors of the building are designed for retail stores and shops on both Woodward avenue and Witherell street sides. The remainder of the building up to the thirty-first floor will be occupied by business and professional offices and the four top floors are to be reserved for artists, writers and teachers of music.

The style of architecture closely follows the Italian Renaissance. There will be four loggias, on the thirty-third and thirty-fourth floors, with balconies on the thirty-first and thirty-third floors, which will add greatly to the beauty and distinctiveness of the structure.

The building will have 140,000 square feet of floor space, will be 380 feet high, and will cost approximately $1,500,000.

High schools in Michigan and in other states often make considerable efforts in attempts to be placed upon University "lists" but when one gathers a little information on the subject one wonders whether it is a mark of inferiority or of superiority to be placed upon such a list. Even university professors are disgusted with conditions as they are and as evidence of their disgust, have organized a society called the "Association of American Professors." Whenever a president or a Prof. gets fired, the association investigates the matter at once and sends a report of the investigation to all of its members. The Profs. seem to have a grudge against the money Power which isn't very strange when one considers that it is almost impossible for a U or a College professor to expose graft in connection with public utilities or political parties without losing his position. A prof of economics, which deals with financial subjects has a right to discuss the money Power because of the subject he teaches but university trustees will not have so and many Profs have been talking about a nation wide strike as a result.

Drowning The Brain In Blood

Apoplexy might be called that—the drowning of the brain in one's own blood. A small artery has been damaged and made to undergo unusual strain bursts. The blood seeps out around the sensitive brain cells and these cells can no longer work normally.

Perhaps there are those who are wondering what happens when some people die immediately with a "stroke" while others linger for some time with apoplexy and a few "recover."

If the tiny artery in the brain bursts wide apart and lets a considerable quantity of blood escape into the brain tissue before a clot can form in the hole of the wall of the blood vessel, then a great number of brain cells which are extremely sensitive are going to be be damaged. If too many are too thoroughly soaked in blood they are going to stop work and a whole some "strike" of these important brain cells means instant death. Brain cells which control certain parts of the body and important organs cannot cease work for a minute without "stopping the whole works."

If a very small rent was caused in the artery, and a slight amount of blood were allowed to escape, the damage to the brain cells may not be so great and while serious paralysis may occur, the wholesale "strike" does not take place to cause instant death.

Nature always tries to repair damage in the body so she [illegible] to work and endeavors to stop up or repair the hole in the blood vessel and to pick up or absorb the blood lying loose in the tissues. If she can do this the brain cells soon recover their power and the paralysis may gradually disappear. At last the patient may become partially or apparently wholly capable of using those muscles and organs which were checked in their activity. If the damage has been too great the brain cells never recover and the patient remains entirely powerless to use the parts which are controlled by those brain cells.

Safety at the crossing

Travel by railroad is only a third as hazardous as it was thirteen years ago. The number of passenger fatalities was reduced from 441 in 1913 to 175 in 1925. Railway employment, likewise, is only a third as hazardous as thirteen years ago. The number of employee fatalities was reduced from 3,715 in 1913 to 1,523 in 1925.

The New York Central Lines were among the pioneers in the promotion of organized safety work in the United States. Carrying 10 per cent of the passengers and having nearly 10 per cent of the total number of railroad employees, this transportation system has contributed substantially to this remarkable safety achievement, which was largely the result of a cooperative spirit obtaining between employer and employee.

Crossing accidents present a new problem. Last year 22 per cent of these accidents were due to automobiles running into the side of trains. A large majority occurred in daylight where the approaching train could be seen, and at crossings in the locality where the driver resided.

Full cooperation on the part of motorists will reduce crossing accidents to a small number. Approach crossings prepared to stop and know that the way is clear before attempting to cross.

FIRE CAUSE DARK

The second fatal fire in a fortnight for this locality occurred Monday on East Main Street, in this village, when at noon the alarm was broadcasted. The fire fighters at once responded and found the roof afire on the vacant house recently purchased by Jacob Lane of Hillsdale from Frank Foster. The building was soon past recovery, but the chemical engine did good work in protecting the nearby houses, particularly the Clement home next west. The exceedingly dry weather of the past few days rendered the situation very hazardous and the burning embers started a fire on the roof of the Congregational parsonage diagonally across the street, also ignited the roof of the Lew Eggleston house, but both were quickly extinguished. Cause of the fire is unknown at the present time, but Mr. Lane carried an insurance of two thousand dollars on the building. It had been vacant for some time and was being re-painted inside. Jonesville fire department made a quick run to the fire and did good work

TATTOOED MAN TO GET SCIENCE'S AID

The science of plastic surgery has come to the relief of Albert Blichmann, 37-year-old millwright of Dubuque, La., whose countenance is a compact mosaic tattoo, applied by an unknown hand.

Blichmann, after months of unique visissitudes, prevailed on authorities at Detroit to send him to the University of Michigan hospital, at Ann Arbor for such aid as Dr. Frederick A. Coller, plastic surgeon, can give.

The wierd story by which Blichmann gained admittance to the hospital began with the assertion that on May 5, 1925, he left Dubuque for Chicago—clear of countenance.

"I met some friends," he said "and I guess I must have been doped, because the next conscious thought I had was on May 8, three days later, in Detroit."

Although admitting that as a former army cook he had submitted to diverse and sundry tattooing of no meager proportions, Blichmann vigorously denied that he "had this done."

By "this" he referred to butterflies, stars, arrowheads, and other gaudy tatoo designs which had converted his countenance into the envy of any South African chieftain.

Lenawee Girl Champ For Health in State

Alice Lipp, 14 years old, of Riga, Lenawee county, is the health champion of 30 Michigan counties.

She will compete for the state championship at the Michigan State Fair in Detroit in September.

Miss Lipp weighs 115 pounds. She is 61½ inches tall.

The biggest thing in life is health, and the next biggest is sense enough to know it.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CONQUERED

You can be permanently relieved from the distressing diseases, Hay Fever and Asthma. No matter of how long standing or how violent your case may be, permanent relief may be obtained in most cases by the use of HIMALYA.

"Gentlemen:-

"Replying to yours of the 11th instant, will say that I am glad to add one more testimonial to the praise of HIMALYA. I am 44 years old and when I was 15 years of age I began to suffer with Asthma, and the paroxysms got worse and more frequent for the next ten years, until I could rest no way when an attack was on; but thanks to 'HIMALYA' I am well and I suffer no more from Asthma, and as it has been ten years since I was cured, I feel that the cure is permanent, but should it ever recur, I would send for another treatment of HIMALYA. I had used every remedy I could hear of, all to no good, but HIMALYA gave me relief from the start. HIMALYA is the one great boon for Asthma and Hay Fever sufferers, and I will always be glad to recommend it to all who suffer with same. As ever,

FIGHT ON LIGHTS DARKENS TOWN

Sherwood, the last town in Michigan to discard kerosene lamps as a means of street illumination, is in darkness every night while two factions in the city government fight out the problem of installing a new lighting system.

The younger element took the lead months ago in the fight for electric lights. They thought they had won the battle when they got contro of the village board after a hotly contested election. But they reckoned without the older folks' opposition to any change, especially to a change that threatened to increase the village tax tired farmers and their wives, who pay the larger share of the taxes, see little need for illuminating the streets at night. Some fo them consider it extravagant to pay for electric current to light the streets when everyone is in bed, anyway. A few gallons of kerosene would keep the street lamps burning from one month's end to the next, as has been the custom for 50 years.

"You can't put in electric lights without the consent of the people," they reminded the village board. "Go ahead, and make all the plans you want to, but you're wasting your time."

Unwilling to saddle on the community the expense of a special eection, the eectric light forces finally hit upon a plan which they believed would knock out the opposition at a single blow. The board might not have the power to install electric lights without a vote of the people; but what was to stop them from disposing of the antiquated light system and leave the community in darkness until it surrendered to electric light? A search of the town charter soon brought the answer, "Nothing."

So down came the oil lamps.

Burning Marshes In State Is Fatal to Wild Ducks' Nests

Probably the best known "wild duck" in the state has been the mallard or green head. This specie is found in practically all parts of the world and from it nearly all varieties of domesticated ducks have been propagated. At one time not so long ago, the mallard was the most abundant duck in Michigan. This was before the intensified system of drainage had been carried out as it has today.

The mallard prefers to breed about the small marshes and pond-holes, building its nest back a short ways from the water's edge. But since the draining of man yof these breeding places this specie has disappeared rapidly and bids fair to disappear entirely from the few remaining duck marshes in the state, except during the migration.

It has been the custom of persons living about marshes to burn them either during the fall or spring. This was done right at the height of the nesting season and many species of wild life have been destroyed. Young ducks and eggs were destroyed in large numbers, and many of the adult birds became so confused that they flew directly into the fire.

Athlete of 80 at Petoskey Is Envy of Aspiring Youths

"There he is," cried an excited youngster as he and his young brother and sister hurried along toward a point of vantage at the men's campus and game field of Bay View, near Petoskey.

He had reference, not to some young, suple athlete doing special stunts for their entertainment, but to an old-young man of 80 summers, none other than Thomas I. Daniel, late private secretary to Judge Steere, of the Michigan supreme court. Daniel's ability to do acrobatic stunts, even to the double backward flipflop, cartwheel and others, and do them better, has earned for him a place in the hearts of young and old.

Forty years ago Daniel erected his own comfortable and attractive summer cottage in Bay View, and for 40 summers has been cutting up capers for the entertainment of the children to keep himself fit.

Crosses Trail of Burglar Who Steals "Cop's" Trousers

It was lucky for Patrolman Marion Ratliff that a brother Detroit officer crossed the trail of a thief who robbed the Ratliff home. Otherwise Ratliff would have had to report "absent" the following morning.

Wakened by the ringing of the doorbell at 5 a. m., Ratliff searched frantically but fruitlessly for his trousers, and finally went to the door in night attire.

There he met a fellow officer, with the missing garment on his arm.

Investigation proved that a thief had stolen the trousers and had abandoned them after extracting a ring, 35 cents and a revolver holster.

Even if a man is a poor thinker he may be able to do the Charleston.

Statue of Ford In Brazilian Town Is Plan Now Afoot

Although Henry Ford has never been in Brazil, his name will perhaps go down in history alongside tha tof General Bondon and other pioneers who are today pushing the vast line of Brazilian wilderness back from the seacoast.

A newspaper in the city of Uberabinha, state of Minas Geraes, has originated the idea of erecting a statue to Henry Ford in that town.

The editor of the newspaper got in touch with all the Ford agencies throughout Brazel, and stressed his view that it being the starting point for all travel into the westernmost states of Govaz and Matto Grosso, the the city of Uberabinha should possess as a traditional landmark, a statue in honor of "the man who devised the handy machine that has conquered Brazil's wilderness.

The idea met with general approval.

Dr. Lowe to Make Survey of Wild Life in Keweenaw

An extensive survey of the wild life resources of Keweenaw County will be made this summer by Dr. John N. Lowe, of the Northern States Normal School, Marquette. The work will be done at the request of the Department of Conservation. Dr. Lowe expects to arrive in Keweenaw County within a few days and will spend the greater part of the summer there.

Dr. Lowe also will spend some time on the Otter River, while in the copper country. Last summer he studied grayling in the river and it was upon his recommendation that the grayling section of the river was closed to fishing by the State Legislature. He is especially interested in determining what effect this has had on increasing the grayling.

The Keweenaw County survey will be one of the most comprehensive attempted in Michigan. Dr. Lowe will be accompanied by several assistants.

Highway 10-M From Flint To Pontiac Is Closed

The main road from Pontiac to Flint M-10, is closed beyond Pontiac. The road will probably be closed for the rest of the summer to allow Oakland county to resurface this section of Woodward avenue.

This road was badly cut up during the winter, and while the Oakland county road commissioner objected to blocking this section of highway, it is necessary. A detour three and a half miles long has been laid out to handle traffic. The road will be closed for two and a half miles.

The cement road between the junction of the Farmington road and Grand River to Pontiac has been completed and is now open for travel.

Wild Ducklings Are Shielded by U. S. Law

This is the time of year lake shore residents observe swimming broods of mallards, pintails and teal with the youngsters strung out behind the old bird. Often attempts are made to trap part of the brood for pets or by sportsmen to be used as decoys.

This is a poor practice and one quite likely to get the "trapper" in bad with Federal authorities.

One violator recently captured 37 young ducks and the Federal judge said, "Ten dollars each, $370, or 90 days in jail."

This offense is in direct violation of the Federal Migratory Bird Act unless a permit is first obtained from Washington.

MASTODON SKULL HUNTED ON FARM

It may have been on a hot July day 10,000,000 B. C. or thereabouts that a giant mastodon perspiringly made his way down to a watering place on what is now the Clare Lamb farm near Hartford, Mich., to slake his thirst. Possibly it was a feeling of extreme aridity that drove him to near the edge of the quicksands. At any rate, three of his teeth and a portion of his jawbone have been there to this day; and there are reasons to believe that excavation operations now in progress will reveal shortly the remainder of his skeleton.

A force of diggers, equipped with a derrick and other modern implements, are attempting to raise what is believed to be the skull of the prehistoric monster. Spurred on by the discovery of a third mastodon tooth, the owner of the farm spaded up a portion of the quicksands and, at a depth of about four feet, struck a bone that was too firmly imbedded to remove by ordinary methods.

Although the skeleton, or what Lamb believes to be the mastodan, is only a few feet down, it is in the quicksands, and it has been impossible, with the means at his disposal, even to get a glimpse of the object.

The first evidence that a mastodon's remains might be buried on the Lamb farm was unearthed five years ago when a milk molar was picked up from the sand that had been piled on the bank of the creek just after it had been dredged. The curious object was sent to the University of Michigan, where naturalists confirmed the discoverer's belief that it was actually a mastodon tooth.

Summer Roster Gains At Western Normal

Enrollment figures, issued by Registrar John C. Hoekje, for the summer session of the Western State Normal, show a marked increase in the courses leading to degrees. This year 516 students are enroled, as compared with 409 last year.

While the increase may be traced, to a certain extent, to the effect of the 1925 certification law, the chief reason for this expansion is beleved to be in the number of courses offered to those interested in a three-year course. Among the three-year courses are listed manual arts, home economics, art, music, commerce, physical education for men and physica education for women. The only two-year courses offered are early and later elementary and the junior and senior high school. The A. B. and B. S. courses require four years.

Plans already are well under way for the western Michigan potato show to be hed at Greenville October 28, 29 and 30.

Moore, of the extension department of Michigan State college, has given assurance of an enthusiastic cooperation of the colege, and the state board of agriculture is to provide about $450 of the $800 prize money. It is expected that President Butterfield, of the State college, will be the principal speaker at the annual show banquet.

New State Park On Lake Romantic to Indians, Is Opened

Michigan's newest state park—on the southern shore of Higgins lake has been officially opened by P. J. Hoffmaster, superintendent of state parks. The park is in Roscommon county, five miles out of Roscommon.

Higgins, whose waters are as blue as baby eyes, possessed many superstitutions for the Indians. One of these legends accounted for the antipathy which the Indians showed for the lake and which kept them off its waters.

An underground river, according to the Indians, flowed from Lake Superior to Higgins. The legend which accounted for this records the drowning of an Indian chief in Superior during a storm. A dead body, the Indians declared, never rises to the surface in Superior. But months after the drowning of the Indian chief, his body was found floating on the shore of Higgins lake.

Man Believed Poor Dies Leaving Fortune

When William Vincent, of Tekonsha village, near Marshall, died more than three years ago, his relatives did not know that he left any property of value. His family knew he had some land near St. Andrew's bay, Florida, where he had planned to plant an orange grove, but which failing health prevented him. Advice from Florida now indicates that the property there is very valuable. Relatives have just discovered the deeds in a safety deposit box in a Coldwater bank, the key to which had been lost, and the box has now been opened.

$402,748,140 Gain In Detroit Wealth Reported In Year

Detroit's part in the increase in personal and real property in Wayne county of $482,177,217 was $402,748,140, according to a report submitted at the closing session of the board of county supervisors.

The report, prepared by Arthur C. Whitcomb, chairman of the equalization committee, shows that the present assessed valuation in the county is $4,002,865,779. This is an increase of 13.69 per cent ocer last year. The increase in 1922 over 1921 was $141,270,975, showing that the increase throughout 1925 is about four times what it was in 1921.

Of these figures, the tax assessment for the county will be made in October when the budget committee has made its report.

THE PICNIC

SYNOPSIS—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyotte pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley. Prospecting in Hermanos valley, Caleb meets a man, Evans, who boasts of his ability, through "divining rods," to locate water without boring.

"But it ain't no good," he said, suddenly disconsolate. "'Cause why? What's the good of water 'less you can use it? The sile here ain't thick enough to put dirt in yore fingernails. It wouldn't grow a radish. An' the wells wouldn't be artesian. They'd have to have windmills to work 'em. And, as I said, they ain't no sile. Seems like a plumb bit of foolishness to put water where it ain't no manner o' use, don't it?"

"Have another cigar," said Caleb. "Where do you suppose all the water comes from?"

The Welshman looked at him pityingly.

"You fish that stream an' you'll see. This is Caliente sink. The stream runs into it like dishwater goes down the drain. Wish you luck, mister. An' thanks for the smokes. Some day, if you come this way, an' I'm feelin' better, I'll give you a demonstration. I'll be glad to see you any time. Kinder lonesome here in this oven, but it's baking me back to health."

Caleb went on upstream in a maze. It seemed, though his Yankee mind affected to scoff at the suggestion while it considered it, as if he had come into close touch with mystery. He fingered the emblem on his seal and smiled. Had the sign of the zodiac, Aquarius, really charged him with destiny, leading him along the trail to be the Water-Bearer to the frontier city of the sands?

Half a mile up the canyon from where the gravel road branched off, an arroyo entered from the east through a bench that was thick-furred with underbrush of desert species. Only a trickle of water was in the almost dry watercourse, barely lasting to mingle with Hermanos creek.

The place was wild enough, and silent. A grass-grown road chose either bank at random, fording the creek at frequent intervals. He found stones to keep his feet dry as he crossed.

Up the road he began to come across evidences of an abandoned rancheria. There was little left but the roots and a scattering of tentative tendrils, scantily leaved. He passed a corral, no longer tenable, a lean-to shed without a roof, a leaking flume, a tumbledown wall of stone, and then he became aware that he was walking through what had been once a garden, a stately garden, still with a certain dignity.

The garden had attracted him unconsciously and he had left the half-obliterated road. He did not go back to it but wandered on to the house that rose above the cypress guard. Caleb's footsteps rang hollowly as he passed over the flags and glanced in through where a door had failed as warder. He was beginning to people the place with such ghosts as he imagined should represent the former occupants when he heard the high, clear sound of laughter at the very instant that his nostrils conveyed to his nerves of smell, thence to palate and to stomach—so that his mouth watered and his appetite proclaimed itself with no uncertainty—the smell of broiling meat.

His hope of something from a ranch larder, a glass of milk, a piece of cake or pie, if nothing more substantial, had died with sight of the deserted house. The tracks he had been trailing must lead too far for him to follow uncertainly. And now he had blundered on to a picnic—a California picnic—which means a barbecue.

Caleb's stomach yearned, rose in revolt against his manners and so far won that he ventured to the outer door of the arch and peered through. The laughter had ended but he could hear the chatter of young voices, men and women, hidden somewhere down by the stream that had wheeled to flow in front of the old house and sparkled through the interstices of a tall, thick mantle of wild-grape, flung over the arms of the trees.

In front, between house and stream, there was a smoking pit straddled by an iron grid on which two swarthy men were turning joints of meat from which came the smell that had loosened all the spigots of Caleb's gastric economy. One of them looked up. Caleb had no time to disappear. No wish, once the mutual recognition had been made. The cook, el cocinero, was Luis Padilla.

The swinging screen of grapevine parted and two people came through, Betty Clinton in her riding togs and an upstanding young man in riding breeches, puttees and a shirt of silken tan, with a tan-colored stock about his neck. A tall, good-looking chap with a clipped yellow mustache and brown eyes, good teeth displayed in a hearty laugh, generally genial and eminently well pleased with things in general.

The girl was laughing, too, laughing so heartily in silvery carillons that she stopped from sheer lack of breath and then, regaining somewhat of gravity and lung power, called to Luis:

"What is it, Luis?"

"Senorita, eet eez el Senor Warner."

"Discovered, upstage, center, peering through the postern," said Caleb as he came out in response to the girl's instant and cordial greeting.

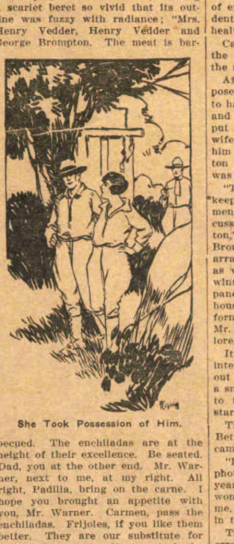
"You are just in time. Did you come on foot? How did you know we were here? Mr. Warner, Mr. Thurston."

The two shook hands while Warner explained the accidental happening of his arrival. Betty Clinton was giving some directions to Padilla and his assistant.

"Come on," she said, "and meet the rest. Dad's here. This is my annual picnic and barbecue. Birthday festivity, you know."

She took possession of him. The man named Thurston lagged behind as they broke through the vines and looked down upon a level bank of turf, fringed with ferns, just above the level of the creek. Two girls and an older woman were aiding and directing the laying of a table by two men. Clinton himself sat apart, back to the bole of a tree, smoking. He rose as Caleb came into view and the rest looked up.

"I'll make the introduction general," said Betty Clinton. "You can all make it personal later. This is Mr. Caleb Warner. I think I've mentioned him to all of you. And these are—Carmen Wilson"—she indicated a girl with black eyes, in a white dress, wearing a scarlet beret so vivid that its outline was fuzzy with radiance; "Mrs. Henry Vedder, Henry Vedder and George Brompton. The meat is barbecued. The enchiladas are at the height of their excellence. Be seated. Dad, you at the other end. Mr. Warner, next to me, at my right. All right, Padilla, bring on the carne. I hope you brought an appetite with you, Mr. Warner. Carmen, pass the enchiladas. Frijoles, if you like them better. They are our substitute for Boston beans, you know. And the salsa, Mr. Brompton."



She Took Possession of Him.

The meal was all animation. Good viands, good nature and a general bubbling over of high spirits.

Bits of the talk, allusions, chaffing remarks, together with little summaries supplied him by Betty Clinton, soon put Caleb in possession of surface information concerning the members of the party.

Thurston had been a bank clerk, losing his position in the merger of banking interests. But he had possessed sound commercial faculties and, backed to some extent by his uncle, he had started raisin growing in the Fresno valley. Now he owned hundreds of acres and was rated almost a millionaire, soon to pass that mark.

Henry Vedder was editor of the Pioneer, a weekly published in Golden, of recognized literary merit. His wife had a leaning toward modern esthetics, extending to her gown and her mode of hairdressing. She apparently saw nothing except through the medium of her husband and she hung on his every word in the attitude of one who eagerly waits the opportunity to encore the performance of a favorite dramatist.

George Brompton was an artist who specialized in mural work. He was the most diffident of all the company, with an especial shyness toward Carmen Wilson, which that vivacious personage did not appear to regard as the kind of tribute to her charms that she preferred.

Thurston and Betty Clinton had ridden down Hermanos canyon to the picnic on horseback. The rest had come in a buckboard, by the longer road, a wagon preceding with the materials for the barbecue. Luis Padilla had come mounted. The vehicles and the horses were stowed in the old barns. The whole party was returning to El Nido in the early evening, where Maria was now preparing a fitting dinner for the fiesta of her young senorita's birthday.

"You are to come, too," she insisted to Caleb. "And stay over tomorrow. I am not to be denied anything today and I make that an order. You need not feel that you are crowding or were not included in the original invitation. There is lots of room."

"You have made it an order," said Caleb. "That settles it."

Here again was a different side to the girl, he thought, as he listened to her lighthearted talk, admiring her quick wit. He caught himself watching her closely whenever she laughed. The inside of her mouth was as pink as a kitten's and she laughed without reserve, so that one caught a gleam of even rows of teeth that needed no dentist, backed by the rosy glow of health.

Caleb enjoyed himself thoroughly, the food, the company, the talk and the shady spot beside the stream.

After the meal, Betty Clinton proposed an excursion. Vedder claimed to have had an inspiration for a poem and said that he was going to try to put it on paper in the old garden. His wife was no more to be detached from him than a limpet from a rock. Clinton himself made the excuse that he was not feeling especially energetic.

"Then Mr. Brompton must stay to keep you company," announced Carmen. "You and Mr. Clinton can discuss that pioneer panel. Mr. Brompton," she went on to Caleb, while Brompton smilingly acquiesced in the arrangement, though the smile was as wan and lacking in warmth as a winter sun, "is working on a set of panels for Judge Hemingway's new house. They are to represent California, past, present and future. And Mr. Clinton is brim full of pioneer lore, aren't you, Mr. Clinton?"

It was obvious that Carmen Wilson intended to make the trip to the lookout a foursome. Clinton smothered a smile. Brompton seemed to be used to this sort of thing and the four started.

They were less than half way when Betty Clinton suddenly missed her camera.

"I have been intending to take a photograph of that view for two years," she exclaimed. "The light is wonderful. Wendell, you'll get it for me, won't you? We'll wait here. It's in the buckboard under the seat."

Thurston went swinging off on his errand and the three sat down to be comfortable until his return. The change of scene seemed to have put Betty Clinton in more serious mood.

"Have you found your opening yet?" she asked Caleb.

It looks as if Carmen Wilson intends to capture Caleb. Does Betty care?

Decries All Fear of Athletic Heart

College students need no longer fear that four years of hard football or track work will leave them with a shaky "athletic heart" in middle age. Experiments by Dr. Burgess Gordon of the Boston Peter Bent Brigham hospital on men and animals revealed that the heart, instead of enlarging after strenuous exercise, actually shrinks. Furthermore, no enlargement of the heart resulted after prolonged athletic training.

Doctor Gordon made his observations on Boston marathon runners, and rabbits with normal and abnormal hearts. The rabbits were exercised to exhaustion, and X-ray pictures taken immediately afterward revealed a shrinkage which took time to disappear. The strained hearts of marathon runners also got smaller, Doctor Gordon said, and did not return to normal for several hours.

Athletes were studied to note any permanent enlargement of the heart which could be blamed on the exercise, but it was found that the most prolonged vigorous efforts did not produce the much dreaded hypertrophy of the heart.

Reasonable Deduction

A well-known criminal lawyer who has a remarkable memory was accosted on the street one day by a man who, he remembered, had a long prison record. The man produced what he termed a rare type of parrot, but the lawyer immediately recognized it as nothing more than a painted sparrow. "This bird flew into my room," he began. "What species do you think it is?" The lawyer after pretending to examine the sparrow, replied, "No, I can't tell you exactly what breed it is, but judging from the company it keeps, I should say it is a jail-bird."

Ya know how people feel about a thing that's spankin' new. They're allus 'fraid of mars and scars and such. And every time I'm in it pop'll watch each thing I do. That's why I can't enthuse about it much.

Aw, what's the fun of ridin', when I leave my purp behind? I hate to see him whine an' fume an' fuss. I don't see why my father didn't wait and try to find a plain old common second-hand bus.—Detroit News.

Feasted on Giant Catfish

Some of the employees of a chair company near Owensboro, Ky., had a feast of catfish at their homes, after a 30-pound fish was found swimming about in a small pool of water in a hollow log, taken from Green river to the chair factory to be sawed into chair stock. The fish was discovered just as the timber was about to be cut up.

Buddy Knew Price He'd Have to Pay

Their parents were giving an elaborate luncheon and little Buddy and Harriet had been told that when they came home from school they should come in quietly through the back door, leave their books and go out again.

This they did, and on the kitchen table saw the glittering array of frail cups and saucers, the best china plates, and silvery baskets of iced cakes, all yellow, made with special thought to carry out a color scheme.

"Oh, the dickens!" exclaimed Buddy in disgust. "No chocolate ones!" and he started to go outdoors.

Harriet's face fell. "Aren't you going to take any?" she wanted to know.

"I am not," declared Buddy. "I ain't afraid to, but they don't look good enough to be whipped for."

Moon Lopsided

Prof. E. W. Brown, of Yale university has, after many calculations, come to the conclusion that the moon is lopsided with quite a pronounced bulge at the top. He explains the irregularity by saying that the heavier materials of its substances are what appear to the eye at the bottom and that a bulging of the upper surface is required if the moon is to balance itself in space.

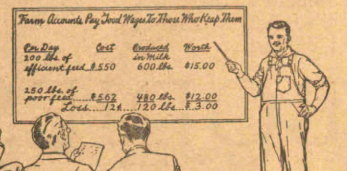
Farmer's Pay Check Cut Down By Waste in Feed

Wasteful feeding, rather than cost of feed, is limiting the profit in dairying and poultry raising, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. "Feed a good feed but don't waste it," is the slogan suggested for the dairyman or poultryman who would go forward in his business, rather than backwards.

"An investigation of the farmer's feeding problems has shown that there is a lamentable waste of good feed going on in nearly every barn in the country," the Institute states. "The same dairyman or poultryman who complains about a difference of five cents a sack between two feeds, will waste many times that amount through his methods of feeding.

"Here is a typical illustration. If a farmer is feeding 20 cows 10 pounds of food apiece a day, he requires 200 pounds of feed. And if feed costs him 2¾ cents per pound, his daily cost of feed is $5.50. But if instead of feeding each cow exactly 10 pounds per day, he guesses at the weight by the scoop-shovel methods, he is likely to give the 20 cows 250 pounds, or 12½ pounds apiece, and his feed bill becomes $6.87 instead of $5.50. Now, supposing that at this rate of cost the dairyman finds his operations are not sufficiently profitable, the first thought to come into his mind is to buy a cheaper feed. So instead of buying a feed that costs him $2.75 a sack, or $55.00 a ton, he buys a feed that costs only $2.25 or $45.00 a ton. He then proceeds to feed his cows 250 pounds a day by the guess-the-weight method and his feed bill is $5.62 per day. This is more than the good feed would have cost if properly used, and the cows, getting the lower grade of feed, fall off in milk production, so that the farmer can't save on the feed bill enough to overcome the loss on his milk check. This should prove to any dairyman that it is more profitable to feed 200 pounds of good feed at a daily cost of $5.50 and get $15.00 worth of milk, than to feed 250 pounds of cheaper grade at $5.62 and get only $10.00 or $12.00 worth of milk.

Farm accounts, accurately and carefully kept, are the only means the dairyman has to keep tab on his business, and will pay very good wages to those who keep them, according to the Institute. The dairyman or poultryman should aim to produce just as economically as possible so that even if he sells at a low price he can still make a fair income, but he cannot do this unless he knows what his actual costs are and the points where these may be shifted with a view of increasing production and decreasing labor and investment costs on each can of milk or dozen of eggs produced. Six farmers who, three years ago, started to lower costs by keeping simple cost records of their poultry, not only increased their egg yield by an average of 19 eggs per hen, but also increased each farmer's income $224.00 a year as pay for the time put in keeping records.



Farm Accounts Pay Good Wages To Those Who Keep Them

Per Day	Cost	Produced in Milk	Worth
200 lbs. of efficient feed	$5.50	600 lbs.	$15.00
250 lbs. of poor feed	$5.62	480 lbs.	$12.00
Loss	12¢	120 lbs.	$3.00

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"The Horrible Expense Of Prohibition"

An editorial in The Outlook of July 7 indulges in this fine bit of irony:

Prohibition, it appears, is too expensive; it has cost too much to acquire and it costs too much to maintain.

That, at least, is the logical construction to be placed on the flaring headlines and colored comment mostly by newspapers that have always been unfriendly to prohibition—on some startling and shocking revelations recently made in Washington.

Wayne B. Wheeler, bored as full of holes as a colander by Senator Reed's gimlet, admitted that the work of the Anti-Saloon League has cost about one cent per person per year for the thirty years. The total of what has been spent in that third of a century is estimated by Mr. Wheeler at $35,000,000. It is this astonishing total, not the insignificant one cent per capita per annum, on which the headlines play.

Also, General Lincoln C. Andrews, chief prohibition enforcement official, went before the Appropriations Committee of the House and asked for twenty five cents per capita to be used in prohibition enforcement during the next fiscal year. Twenty-five cents does not sound, and is not, large. So it is the grand total, $29,000,000, that is used to make prohibition sound like too expensive a luxury. But it turns out that of this sum, $15,000,000 is to be spent for building Coast Guard vessels and the like. Prohibition enforcement is only a part of the Coast Guard's work. The actual expense of prohibition enforcement, therefore, narrows down to perhaps fifteen cents per person.

It is not likely the American people will regard that as an extravagant expenditure for enforcing a law which gives effect to an integral part of the Constitution of the United States.

With what the Anti-Saloon League has spent or will spend, the people as tax payers are not concerned. The Senate committee that brought out the facts—a special committee appointed to investigate expenditures in the Republican primary in Pennsylvania—appears to have had very little legitimate concern with it. Something like $800,000 of Anti-Saloon League money, it appears, has been spent in Pennsylvania since 1919 (that is, on an average about $150 000 a year) but there is still nothing in the record to show that any part of it had anything to do with the Republican primary, and certainly the rest of the $35,000,000 had nothing to do with it.

Still, Senator Reed's committee has forced the statement from Mr. Wheeler that the Anti-Saloon League of America, through its National and State organizations, has spent sums of money equivalent to about one cent per year per person of the population of the United States.

Farmers Day Program To Be Entertaining

Special entertainment features, addresses by prominent speakers, inspection of college experimental plots, farms, livestock, and buildings, with a big picnic dinner at noon, will be combined in the program for Farmers Day at M. S. C. Friday, July 30 for the entertainment of the huge crowds that are expected to gather for the annual event.

John A. Doelle, former commissioner of the state department of agriculture and present executive secretary of the Michigan real estate association will deliver the the main address on the subject "Why Michigan Measures Up to Its Motto." Among other speakers on the program will be Hon. L. Whitney Watkins, state commissioner of Agriculture.

One of the feature attractions of the day which is being looked forward to with a great deal of interest by rival supporters will be the state championship horse pulling contest between two of Michigan's finest farm teams. The teams owned by A. G. Vanderbeck, of Alma and Allen Haskins, of Ionia, were both county fair champions last year but have never been pitted against each other. The contest is expected to be a close one as the teams are evenly matched as to weight and pulling records. It will not be an open contest as it was last year but will be confined to these two teams.

A fifty dollar purse has been posted by the management of the Ionia Free Fair where Haskins' team made its record last year.

Other features of the program will be an exhibition of fancy riding and jumping by officers of the college military department, and the singing contest in which Michigan's best rural church choir will compete for prizes.

The band and choir concert will be held at the noon hour so that the crowds may listen to the music while assembled for the picnic dinner.

The New Service

The recent developments in the electrical arrangements for this village include a pair of new transformers located near the F. I. Williams mill and everything now points to good service to follow in short order. We certainly have earned good service in North Adams by our patience with a lighting system which at its best has been none too good for the past two years. We are paying a maximum price for the current and meter rent and in winter running the gauntlet of hail and sleet storms and all kinds of impediments on the line. Now we hope and trust this is done for all time. It is more than likely our village lines are somewhat depleted and need repairing, but we make bold to declare that if the village had voted to turn them over to Avis & Son at the time the matter was agitated here we should have been in a pretty pickle indeed! We should have been at the mercy of this firm in their ownership and if we desired to hook up with the Consumers Power lines could not have done so.

Five thousand dollars was the price agreed upon which the village should pay for the slender copper wire put up between North Adams and Hudson—in other words we paid for the track and accouterments which were to carry our juice to us and also agreed to pay a good round price per kilowatt, a thing in our opinion we should not have done. If a man peddles milk to our village we don't expect to buy him a Reo Speedcar to carry it in and furnish him with an improved Frigidairre system and bottles also with kine to produce the stuff—far from it. But we agreed to this little double vaudeville stunt and put enough money into it to buy our village a first class little chemical truck and pumper for fire purposes which we could have owned ourselves and so much need. In addition we could have built a two hundred barrel cistern at both ends of the village to protect the citizens and buy five hundred feet of hose, the latter of which we never have had anything but rotten junk. The result today is that we lost what we put into the little up-to date electric plant—foozled it away and all that it is now used for is a lavatory for transients. We don't wish to be sarcastic but we feel like asking if some dub somewhere in our village arrangements has not made a slight mistake? And also if it is not about time the Township of Adams and North Adams village united in owning a real fire fighting apparatns? What do you think?

Poultry Men Will Hold Summer Meet

First annual summer field day of the Michigan State Poultry Improvement Association will be held at the farm of the Larro Milling Company, near Redford, on Thursday, August 12.

A general invitation for all Michigan poultrymen to attend is being issued by J. A. Hannah, extension specialist at M. S. C. and secretary of the Improvement Association. A program of general interest to poultry raisers has been prepared, and Mr. Hannah expects a crowd of 500 or more for the gathering.

Among the speakers booked for the program at the field meeting are L. E. Heaseley, president of the Poultry Improvement Association; Prof. C. G. Card, head of the M. S. C. poultry department; and Prof. H. J. Stafseth, poultry disease specialist who will return August 1 from a year's study of poultry conditions in Europe.

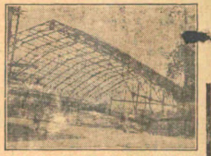
Why I'm going to the Greater MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

By Cousin Joe

THE BIGGEST THRILL IN SOME TIME

In the first place, I'm always ready for a little change around about September. And I just jump into my flivver and point her for the State Fair Detroitway. Been doing it for 17 years and going to do it again this September. Last year I got the thrill of my life. The stunningest girl kept looking at me and I kept wondering who she was and where I'd seen her before. Finally she said: "Joe, don't you recognize me in this new dress I got down town at noon?" Doggonned if it weren't my wife!



PROGRESS OF THE GREATER MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

Construction work is progressing rapidly on the New Agricultural Building which will be completed in time for this year's Fair, Sept. 5th to 11th. It will be the finest structure of its kind in the country and devoted exclusively to the display of flowers, fruits and agricultural products.

and Mr. Stanhope said that he was surprised that a woman with the good business judgment I had should be getting such a small income as those bonds paid— scarcely anything. He said that I should make my money work harder for me. He knew I must have good business judgment, he said, because I brought my children up so beautifully. He offered to take the bonds and change them for his stock."

"Oh, Lord!" exclaimed Aunt Emmy, "did he give you a receipt?"

"Why, of course, he was the nicest man. But Junior said after he left that he didn't like him. He said he looked slick. Boys are so funny. Well, I got the platinum stock but Mr. Barnes at the bank says it's no good. He must be mistaken. But I want my bonds back so I came to you for help And you're always so lucky about your investments."

"Not lucky, just sensible," corrected Aunt Emmy. "Why, oh why, don't you consult your banker, who understands finance before you risk your money? This is not your first loss. Remember that piece of land you bought that was under water?"

"That was different," said Mrs. Norris blushing, "and anyway, Mr. Stanhope is honest, I can tell that."

"If he were honest, he would not have promised you the things he promised. Reputable houses don't send out representatives who make promises about repurchase of stock. Why don't you 'phone your Mr. Stanhope?"

"I did, but he's out of town. I've written, too, but I suppose I shall have to wait until he gets back. It's been several weeks now, so he should be back soon."

Just then the evening paper came. Aunt Emmy glanced at it, then read it attentively. Her expression grew serious. She handed the paper to Mrs Norris. On the front page was an account of a financial scandal. The house that sold Mrs. Norris her mining stock was involved and the men who ran the business had been indicted for fraud.—A. B. Aymes.

The New York Central Lines management now announces that they have just put in service an automatic train control which costs them in the neighborhood of $800,000. This new device is in use on the Boston & Albany, the Michigan Central, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad and one or two others. This is partially on trial as you might say but it is thought the system will prove very successful. It absolutely controls the stopping and starting of the train, and if anything befalls the engineer at his post this control will stop the train at any point on the line, and as we understand it no train can run past a block signal.

The extensive work, which has resulted in equipping the most important divisions of the lines of the New York Central system, including the entire line of the Boston & Albany Railroad, was begun a little less than a year ago when contracts were made for the device which is now in use, and which is of a simple character, permitting the engineer to retain full control of his engine as long as he obeys the rules in regard to operation, but taking that control away from him and operating on the side of safety if he disregards those rules.

The lowest special railroad fares made possible in Michigan for many a year will be available for visitors at the State Fair in Detroit, September 5 to 11. A round trip for one and one-half times the regular one way fare will hold good for the entire time of the Fair, while even a lower rate has been agreed upon for those who wish to take in "Michigan" Day, set for Thursday, September 9. A round trip from any point in the state, for the single one way fare, will hold good for the three day period September 8, 9, and 10.

Children's Day will be observed at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, in Philadelphia, on July 26. More than 5,000 children from forty recreation centers will take part. A Boy Scout parade and harmonica band concerts have been arranged. Field events will be staged by the children. All of the child visitors to the Exposition on that day will be admitted free to the big rodeo in the stadium.

A collection of rare animal skins representing the labors of a group of hunters in remote parts of Africa and South America for a number of years, is one of the costly exhibits shown in a display window of the Palace of Foreign Exhibits at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, now being held in Philadelphia. The skins, expertly cured so that the texture is as soft as velvet, are owned by a firm manufacturing highest grade gloves. The exhibit is insured for $50,000.

Piano Playing Contest

Plans for a state-wide piano playing contest for school children to be held next year, will be made at the second annual convention of the Michigan Music Merchants' association to be held at the Book Cadillac Hotel August 16-19, it has been announced by Frank J. Bayley of Detroit, state president and head of the Detroit Music Trades association.

This move comes as a result of the successful contest held for the parochial and public school children of Greater Detroit. The champion will be named at the final contest to be held August 17 at the famous Belle Belle Isle "bowl" Scheman's band will cooperate and several vocalists and instrumentalists "loaned" by phonograph companies will be included in the public concert.

Detroit is the first city in America to conduct such a contest and it has struck a popular chord throughout the United States. Scores of inquiries have been received from various cities interested in holding similar affairs.

Another feature of the convention will be the public block dance to be held in the heart of the down town business section. Two blocks on Washington Boulevard will be roped off from traffic and music will be broadcast by an amplifier which is said to send a voice five miles through space.

Due to the intense interest in the piano playing contest, special delegations from Chicago, Cleveland and New York are coming to the convention. Invitations have been sent to music merchants in Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan. It is expected upward of 1,000 persons will attend the four day sessions.

The tentative entertainment program includes golf, swimming and sailing at the Detroit Masonic Country Club, followed by a dinner dance on August 16; the grand finale of the piano playing contest the night of August 17; discussion of plans for the state-wide contest demonstrations of piano instructions methods and annual banquet and dance, August 18; a trip to the Ford Airport and the Ford River Rouge plant on August 19.

Put In Bay

Moonlight dancing excursions on Detroit river and Lake St. Clair on the big Steamer Put In Bay constitute a delightful feature of summer life in the metropolis.

Every evening during the excursion season the young folks gather at the Ashley & Dustin steamer line wharf at the foot of First street and when the Steamer Put in Bay arrives from her daily trip across Lake Erie to Put In Bay Island and Sandusky, Ohio, at 8 p. m., the gay crowd takes possession of the steamer; the orchestra strikes up a fox trot and the dancers glide out on the polished hardwood floor into the blaze of the ship's lights.

In this automobile age these steamer dancing parties are not monopolized by the young folks of the city for crowds of young people from neighboring cities and villages drive in to enjoy the novel experience of dancing in midlake whree the cool breezes blow and the moonlight dances on the waves. The steamer returns to her wharf promptly at 11 p. m., so that out of town visitors may reach home at a reasonable hour.

The Steamer Put In Bay gives public dancing moonlight excursions every Wednesday, Thursday Saturday and Sunday, at 8:45 p.m. and on the other evenings of the week, except Friday, the moonlights are given by clubs and societies but nonmembers are usually welcome.

The history of the locomotive building industry can be traced by the exhibits of the Baldwin Locomotive Works in the Palace of Transportation at the Sesqui Centennial International Exposition, now being held in Philadelphia. The exhibit includes an engine built by Mathias Baldwin in 1830; the "Big Mogul," a locomotive weighing seventy-five tons, which was awarded a prize at the Centennial Exposition fifty years ago, and a modern freight engine which weighs 350 tons.

Women Have New State Fair Home

Women visitors at the Michigan State Fair, September 5 to 11 this year, are to be "at home" in a new headquarters building of their own.

The old administration building, historically famous as the "Michigan" building at the St. Louis world's fair in 1904, is being completely renovated and remodelled for its new use as the center of all women's activities during the Fair. The broad porches of the building are once more to serve the hospitable purpose for which they won fame at St. Louis more than 20 years ago.

Located near the main entrance to the fair grounds, the new Woman's Building is ideally situated to serve as a headquarters building. The entire first floor will be used for lounging and reception rooms, while competitive exhibits in all the many household classes will be housed on the second floor.

Tempting baked goods, from the ovens of the state's best home cooks, will be entered here for prizes. In fact, the list of domestic products will run all the way from cakes and preserves to fancy needle work and china.

All Farm Groups To Play Host At Fair

Michigan's leading farm organizations are all to play host during the State Fair this year, with head quarters in the new hundred thousand dollar agricultural building which is being rushed to completion on the fair grounds.

Exhibit and headquarters space already assigned in this building shows that practically every agricultural interest in the state will be represented in one or more of the booths. The Michigan State Farm Bureau, the State Grange, the Gleaners Order, the State Department of Agriculture, the Michigan State College, and various special farm organizations and development bureaus have all taken space.

The new agricultural building, which is already under roof and will be completed by August 15, will rank as the largest and best equipped agricultural exhibit building in the United States. It will give Michigan agriculture its justly dignified and important place at the State Fair, September 5-11.

The atmosphere of the building during the Fair will be that of a great indoor garden. Displays by the Michigan Florists Association will be banked around a fountain in the center of the hall. Then extensive exhibits of fruit and field crops will fill the rest of the central space.

In the more than 600 feet of special exhibit booths around the walls, a dozen agricultural organizations and groups serving agricultural directly will have their headquarters. No concession space at all is to be sold in the building.

Michigan Wheat King To Defend His Crown

The champion wheat grower of Michigan, Mr. C. D. Finkbeiner, of Washtenaw County, will defend his crown in the competition at the Michigan State Fair in Detroit September 5 to 11. Mr. Finkbeiner is one of the first men to notify the Fair management that he will compete in the crops classes this year.

In addition to the unofficial title of state champion, Finkbeiner hold a number of national honors. His Red Rock wheat has won the blue ribbon at the International Hay and Grain Sbow on several occasions—the highest honor possible in the crops exhibit world.

Finkbeiner's grain samples will meet the stiffest kind of competition in the various crops classes in the agricultural department at the State Fair. Hundreds of entries, from every section of Michigan, will be entered in the race for prizes.

The Southern Greenlouse, commonly known as the Greenbug, has recently been found in Iron County, Michigan, according to Prof. R. H. Pettit, entomologist at the M. S. C. The Greenbug is reported as having destroyed a 20 acre field of oats there. It is the first record of the pest in the Upper Peninsula, and is probably the first instance of any real damage from it anywhere in the state. Minnesota has recently reported considerable damage from the seme pest. It is normally kept in check by parasites, according to Professor Pettit.

How Fast Shall We Ride?

Mr. Arthur Brisbane,
Editor Evening Journal,
238 William Street, City.

Dear Sir: In a recent widely circulated editorial from your gifted pen you asserted that "There are government owned railroads in Germany that run about three times as fast as our average transcontinental railroad speed."

The Los Angeles Limited on the Union Pacific makes the trip between Chicago and Los Angeles in 68 hours at an average speed of 33.8 miles an hour. Three times this speed would be 101.4 miles an hour. Will you oblige me with the name of the railroad in Germany which offers this speed to travelers and the names of the cities between which these fast trains operate?

But would 101.4 miles an hour meet the requirements of modern travel? Has not the time now arrived to put into effect the proposal made in 1854 by Judge Meigs for a railroad in a mathematically straight line from coast to coast on which locomotives with drivers 15 feet in diameter could attain a speed of 300 miles an hour? That would give us a nine hour train service between New York and San Francisco.

Or should we lead up to it by first establishing a gyroscope monorail system crossing streams and canyons on a single cable instead of the clumsy truss bridges of a bygone age with trains of palace cars as wide as cottages hurtling through space at 200 miles an hour as so vividly described in the Sunday American some fifteen years ago?

Your assert further in your editorial that if we had government owned railroads we could get better speed by voting for it. I can find data on pounds of coal consumed per thousand gross ton miles and per passenger car mile, but nothing on votes per thousand gross ton-miles or passenger car mile. If you have the statistics at hand will you not kindly tell me how many votes would be required to operate a train of ten Pullmans from New York to San Francisco at speeds of 100, 200 and 300 miles an hour respectively?

Assuring you that the infoamation sought will be greatly appreciated, I am

Very truly yours,
Charles Frederick Carter

Thomas Jefferson's Gig Exhibited At Sesqui

This historic gig, in which Thomas Jefferson rode from his home in Monticello to Philadelphia, carrying with him the original draft of the Declaration of Independence which was later adopted by the Continental Congress, has been made an official exhibit of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, now being held in Philadelphia.

All that remains of the gig, the spring seat—was brought over the original route traveled by the noted Virginian by a committee named by Governor Byrd, of Virginia. The gig was accepted as a part of the Exposition at fitting ceremonies conducted at the base of the Virginia column in the Forum of Founders, in the Fair grounds. United States Senator Copeland, officers of historical societies and State officials of Virginia and Pennsylvania made addresses. The gig was placed in the Thomas Jefferson House in "High Street of 1776." The historic relic will later be housed in the New York building to remain until the close of the Exposition on December 1.

Major-General M. M. Patrick, Chief of the United States Army Air Corps, flew from Washington to the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, now being held in Philadelphia, recently on a surprise visit. The general, who is 62 years old, piloted his own plane. He was welcomed by officers of the Sesqui Army Flyers and taken on a tour of inspection of Camp Anthony Wayne, the model army camp in the Exposition grounds. Later he watched the testing of a new airplane catapult, which was tested at the League Island Navy Yard, adjacent to and virtually a part of the Exposition.
